C.I.O. Opens Campaign To Amend Trust Law

Seeks Exemption For Trade Unions; Lewis Denounces Apex Verdict

The C. I. O. last night opened a fight to amend the Sherman anti-trust law, which it said had been "prostituted to union-smashing purposes."

Citing the Apex Hosiery Co. suit, in which the Federal court at Philadelphia awarded the company damages of $712,000 from a C. I. O. union following a sit-down strike, the C. I. O. announced appointment of a committee of 11 union officials to conduct the drive for amendment of the law.

John L. Lewis, C. I. O. president, said the committee's aim would be to mobilize a nation-wide protest against the Apex verdict "as a serious threat to all labor organizations." It will seek to change the law "so that it shall be stated in such clear, unequivocal, unmistakable terms that even judges can understand that the Sherman act shall never again be applied to trade unions."

The industrial union organization called on "all unions in the country, whether C. I. O., A. F. L., or unaffiliated" to support the amendment move and back the hosiery workers in their efforts to reverse the verdict.

Triple Damages Awarded

The Federal Court jury blamed Branch One, American Federation of Hosiery Workers, and William Leader, its president, for damages to property and business suffered by the company during the 48-day strike at the company's Philadelphia plant in 1937. The jury cut the damages to $237,310, though the company originally sued for $1,171,987.

But a ruling under the Sherman act, that the strike restrained interstate commerce, automatically caused the amount of damages awarded by the jury to be trebled.

Denouncing the verdict, John Brophy, national director of the C. I. O., declared last night:

"The issue involved is not the sit-down strike, nor the claimed damages to the company's plant, but whether unions can exercise their lawful rights in strikes free from possible prosecution and triple-damage lawsuits under the Sherman act, regardless of the effect on Interstate Commerce.

"If this verdict is upheld, no union can feel safe in exercising its right to strike without danger of lawsuits designed to bankrupt and destroy it.

"It is outrageous that the Sherman act, which was intended to curb the predatory powers of big corporations to prey upon the people, should be prostituted to union-smashing purposes as in the Apex case."

Assails Reasoning of Verdict

He held it was specifically stated in the antitrust law that it shall not apply to labor unions, adding:

"In corporation cases the courts have often held that a corporation must control nearly 100 per cent of an industry to be found guilty under the Sherman act. Yet in the case brought against the Hosiery Workers, which involved only 3 per cent of the industry, the union was found guilty of 'restraint of trade.'"

The C. I. O. committee named yesterday includes James B. Carey, C. I. O. secretary, and president of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers; Emil Rieve, executive director of the Textile Workers Organizing Committee; R. J. Thomas, recognized by the C. I. O. as president of the United Automobile Workers; Heywood Broun, president of the American Newspaper Guild; Reid Robinson, president of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers; Bruce Hannon, secretary of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific.

Parachutist Injured as Wind Sweeps Him, Girl Into Marsh

Miss Helen Frigo, parachute jumper and winner of the 5-mile light plane race for women yesterday at College Park Airport, is helped into her parachute by Ray Morders, another parachute jumper, who later suffered internal injuries when blown into a marsh after a leap

9,000 at College Park for Langley Day Air Maneuvers See Unscheduled Thrill as D. C. Fliers Leap Simultaneously

Langley Day air maneuvers at College Park (Md.) Airport ended in near-tragedy yesterday when a gusty wind swept two parachute jumpers into a marsh, injuring one. Nine thousand spectators witnessed the simultaneous leaps from 2,000 feet.

Raymond Morders, 22, of 4529 Wisconsin avenue northwest, who's been dropping out of planes since he was 15, suffered internal injuries and a fractured left rib. He was taken to Providence Hospital by the Bladensburg Rescue Squad. Observers said the parachute had opened perfectly, but that the wind had carried the parachutist off his course.

Miss Helen Frigo, 24, of 732 Twenty-second street, another flier and parachutist, who jumped from the same plane, also dropped outside the field, but managed to land safely.

Earlier Morders had thrilled the crowd by diving nearly 2 miles, a smoking torch marking his wake, before yanking open his parachute and floating to the field. Morders and Miss Frigo, both members of the Washington Parachute Club, were demonsfrating a new type of parachute in the second jumping exhibition.

Royal Danes Meet Great, Humble Here

Crown Prince Shakes Hands With 700 Danish-Americans

The Crown Prince and Princess of Denmark met Washington yesterday—from Supreme Court Justice and Cabinet member to humble Danish-American wage worker.

To anyone less poised and gracious than Prince Frederick and Princess Ingrid, their ordeal would have been bewildering, if not unendurable. In less than six hours the royal couple, who arrived here Saturday, shook hands with more than 700 Americans of Danish and Icelandic origin and then stood in line again for the same number of the Government's most prominent officials.

Both groups came away with the same reactions, which were, in brief, glowing. Without dissenting voice it was agreed that the heirs to the Danish throne were Washington's most charming visitors this year.

At 11 a. m. the Danish-Americans started to pour into the Danish

25,000 at Zoo As City Sizzles

The District's hottest day of 1939 gave thousands their first sunburns yesterday as Washingtonians flocked to recreation centers and country roads. More than 25,000 visited the zoo.

Although the mercury unofficially topped 91, the Weather Bureau observed the day's high point at 90 at 2 p. m. It was warmest May 7 in nine years.

The temperature was due to drop again today. Cooler weather was predicted with clouds and rain.

Killing Suspect Seized as He Leaves Church

Collegian, 22, Denies Slaying Two Salesmen; Ex-Prosecutor's Son

By the Associated Press.

Knoxville, Tenn., May 7.—Robert M. Burgunder, jr., handsome 22-year-old collegian, was lodged in jail here tonight to await the arrival of officers who will return him to Phoenix, Ariz., to face charges of slaying two automobile salesmen.

The young man refused to discuss the accusation that he killed Jack Peterson and Ellis M. Koury, whose bodies were found in a lonely wash near Phoenix last Friday after they had gone on a trip to demonstrate an automobile.

"One wrong word right now might hang me," the suspected slayer told reporters. "I just can't discuss it, except to say that I am not guilty of murder."

Burgunder was brought here by automobile under guard from Johnson City, Tenn., where he was arrested this morning by Sheriff Earl Sell as he left the First Christian Church. He said he would not fight extradition to Arizona.

The sheriff said the youth told him he stole an automobile for his trip to Tennessee.

A reward of $250 for the capture of Burgunder "dead or alive" was offered by the State of Arizona.

Burgunder was paroled last fall from a Washington State reformatory, where he was committed for a drugstore robbery. Psychiatrists reported he was impelled to robbery because of knowledge obtained in the office of his father, formerly prosecutor at Seattle.

County Attorney Richard F. Harless at Phoenix attributed the slaying of Peterson and Koury to Burgunder's "latent nature for the spectacular" or a desire to get out of a "jam" after attempting to steal a car from the salesmen.

Boiler Blast, Cave-in Kill Father of 5

50 Men Take 2 Hours To Recover Body of Sand Pit Steam Shovel Operator

Marshall Pickett, 38-year-old father of five, was killed yesterday in the saddle of his steam shovel as hundreds of tons of clay and gravel thundered down into the Oloph sand pit at 1500 Morris road southeast, engulfing the excavating machine and exploding its boiler.

Another workman, Joe Butler, colored, escaped death when he left the excavation site 30 seconds before the cave-in to direct an automobile driving near the rim inside the pit.

Nearly 50 police, firemen and pit laborers worked two hours to free Pickett's body, buried 8 feet below a grotesque mass of clay blocks and tangled machinery.

Caught by Second Landslide

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald described the cause of death as chromatic asphyxiation but declined to issue a death certificate immediately, explaining that police are investigating "certain aspects of the case."

Pickett, according to foreman E. A. Richards, was scooping up the debris of a small cave-in earlier yesterday when the second landslide suddenly roared down from a height of 60 feet. His back was to the cliff and his steam-shovel was running at full capacity.

The excavator, according to witnesses, shuddered under the first impact of the avalanche, righted itself for a fraction of a second and then toppled under the river of moving earth. A sheet of flame shot up from the shattered boiler.

None of the 11 other men at work in the pit was injured.

"A Wild Noise"

Residents of Morris road likened the descent of clay and gravel to the sound of a river in flood or mass flight of airplanes. "It was sort of a wild noise," said Mrs. Lula Scott, of 1468 Morris road. "It couldn't be described."

Nearly 1,000 persons gathered at the scene within a few minutes after the cave-in. Fearing a fresh avalanche, authorities assigned a dozen policemen to press back the crowds from the rim of the pit. Officers remained on duty until late last night.

Father of Five

The landslide tore a great horseshoe shaped chunk from the lip of the cliff, twisting its contour from 20 to 40 feet back of the old line.

Pickett lived at 205 Washington Boulevard, District Heights, Md. He leaves his wife, Grace Mae Pickett; five children, Marshall, 17, Betty Mae, 15, George Edgar, 12, Jane, 8, and Robert Lee, 2, and his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Pickett, also of District Heights. He was a member of the Forestville Methodist Church.

King and Queen Don Life Belts In Boat Drill

Aboard the Empress of Australia, May 7 (AP).—King George VI and Queen Elizabeth donned life preservers hurriedly and responded like everyone else aboard to lifeboat drill sirens today on the first full day out on their historic voyage to North America.

The sirens sounded just after Their Majesties had attended divine services conducted by Capt. A. B. Meikle. Prayers included that of the British navy asking God to "preserve us from the dangers of the sea and from the violence of the enemy that we may be safeguarded unto our most gracious sovereign, Lord and King, George VI, and his dominions and security for such as pass on the seas upon their lawful occasions."

The liner ploughed through a moderate sea in bright sunshine with a stiff breeze blowing. The ship covered 252 miles during the first day's run.

Credit Policy Seeks To Bolster Monroe Doctrine in Defense Of This Hemisphere

By Walter Fitzmaurice
International News Service Writer

Official quarters yesterday disclosed the initiation of informal conversations with six Latin-American republics for American governmental loans or credits to stabilize their economies, promote intercontinental trade and buttress Western Hemisphere defenses.

Officials estimated total credits promised, or impending, may reach $250,000,000. Already Brazil has been promised $60,000,000; Cuba, up to $20,000,000, and Haiti has received $5,000,000.

Invitations extended all Latin America to "come up and talk it over" have thus far brought no definite response from Bolivia, Venezuela, Peru or Guatemala. Argentina also remains aloof.

Chilean Finance Minister Wachsholtz, whose left-wing popular front government is wrestling to clean up the devastation of a recent earthquake, is due in Washington in a month or two to request a reported $80,000,000. Officials doubt they can give him more than a quarter or a third of what he seeks.

Somoza Asks $15,000,000

A current Washington caller, President Somoza, of Nicaragua, is authoritatively reported to have asked $15,000,000. Officials indicated he may receive $3,000,000 to $5,000,000, a sum they consider substantial for a country whose population numbers only 1,000,000.

Nicaragua's loan will go for roads, sewers and other public works, but officials doubted it will cover Somoza's pet project, the deepening of the San Juan River. U. S. Army strategists have shelved plans for building the Nicaraguan canal, of which the river would form a link; instead they have recommended the less expensive auxiliary locks on the Panama Canal.

The new species of good-neighbor "dollar diplomacy" has provoked Congressional criticism, led by the veteran isolationist, Senator Johnson (Republican), of California.

Token Payments Exacted

To disarm the attacks of the Johnson forces, the State Department, in negotiating the Brazilian deal, exacted a pledge for that government's resumption of token payments on its defaulted dollar debt and the unfreezing of exchange due American firms exporting to Brazil.

In further defense of the policy, Administration officials maintain it helps to prevent the sterilization of the Treasury's $15,000,000,000 gold hoard, buoys buying power in the vital Latin American export field, and bulwarks the Monroe doctrine area against economic and political penetration by Germany and Japan.

Implicit in each loan is an understanding the land and harbors of the borrower shall be available for United States air and naval squads.

U. S. Intervention Forecast to End Coal Deadlock

By the United Press.

New York, May 7.—Within two days at the most and probably tomorrow, unless representatives of soft coal operators and the United Mine Workers of America reach immediate agreement in the dispute which has shut down the Nation's bituminous mines, the Federal Government will make a public recommendation for solution of the problem, it was indicated tonight.

After a day and night of conferences held separately with representatives of the opposing groups, John R. Steelman, chief of the United States conciliation service, tonight refused comment except to quote from President Roosevelt's strongly worded demand for a quick settlement, the sentence:

"The public interest is paramount and above that of any group."

There was to have been a joint conference between the groups at 2 p. m. today but this was postponed until 10 a. m. tomorrow.

Germany, Italy Agree On Military Alliance; Pope Again Asks Peace

Pontiff's Address, In French, Broadcast To the Eucharistic Congress in Algiers

Plea for Humanity

By the Associated Press.

Vatican City, May 7.—Pope Pius XII renewed his appeal today for "that peace so ardently desired by uneasy humanity" as announcement of a German-Italian military alliance caused fear of new tension in Europe.

The Pope's plea was made in a speech delivered in French and broadcast from Vatican City to the Eucharistic Congress at Algiers.

It followed a week of conferences between papal nuncios and government officials in European capitals, reputedly in carrying out the Holy Father's endeavor to find means of assuring the continent against an outbreak of war.

His message today, however, gave no indication of the nature of any diplomatic moves by the Vatican.

Address Translated

Following is a translation of the Pope's address:

"For the twelfth time, very dear sons of the noble French nation, you are gathered by thousands around Christ, present in the Eucharist, to offer him solemn homage of adoration.

"In the course of recent years Africa has already seen more than one ceremony of this kind. Carthage, mindful of having been the glorious metropolis of the North Africa churches and of having sheltered within its walls more than 30 church councils, started them with its international Eucharistic congress.

"Then the movement was extended to regional and national congresses as far as southern Africa, the Congo, Madagascar, Tripoli and elsewhere.

Centennary Marked

"Today the triumph of the Host is celebrated on these coasts which for a long time were called Barbary. And our heart exalts with joy as we participate in it doubly. We are present in two manners: visibly in the person of Him whom we have chosen as our legate to preside in our name over these eucharistic days, our very dear son, the Cardinal Archbishop of Paris; invisibly but veritably present through our prayers joined with those of your spiritually enthusiastic crowds.

"Neither the churning waves of the sea nor the fracas of armaments which shakes the shores have been able to disturb your mystic Elan: The "bonne mere" of the Garde who led you toward our Lady of Africa (the Pope here referred to Notre Dame de la Garde Shrine erected to the Virgin at Marseille in behalf of those at sea); and in this host gleaming from both hills faith shows you the depth and very author of peace, that peace so ardently desired by uneasy humanity.

"That is what attracted you and encouraged you. That is what unites us intimately with you in this month of May when we would like all the world consecrated to universal prayer—especially the prayers of infants, those privileged ones of the Saviour!—to make the peace promised to men of good

Stratford Again Houses Portrait Of Lafayette

Peale's Work Restored To Lee Ancestral Home After Century

By a Staff Correspondent.

Stratford Hall, Va., May 7.—Under a pair of ancient beeches whose arms were spread in cool benediction, Gilbert de Motier, Marquis de Lafayette, came back today to Stratford Hall after more than a century.

To welcome him to the stately mansion where once he was so well known and loved, were more than 500 persons, gathered under auspices of the Robert E. Lee Memorial Foundation, present owners of Stratford Hall. The Ambassador of France, a retired major general of the United States Army, the president of the foundation recited his great contributions to the cause of American independence and recalled his friendship for Light Horse Harry Lee, once master of Stratford.

The Lafayette who returned today was a young fellow, just 19, brave in the blue and buff of the Continental Army, the twin gold stars of a major general gleaming from his shoulders. He smiled, though very faintly, upon the crowd from the canvas to which Charles Willson Peale committed him 160 years ago.

The portrait, rescued from 100 years of oblivion, was unveiled by Count Doynel de St. Quentin, Ambassador of France, who recalled the warm friendship of Lafayette

Japanese Silent On Axis Pact

Tokyo, (Monday) May 8 (U.P.).—The Foreign Office today refused comment on the Italo-German military pact. Unofficial comment was heard to the effect that the agreement, emphasizing Japan's detachment from the European situation, maintained Japan's decision to avoid the totalitarian line-up against the democracies.

Ultimate effect of the pact on Japan, it was felt, is dependent on events in China and results of Anglo-Japanese conversations.

Contribution to 'Peace'

By the Associated Press.

Milan, Italy, May 7.—Italy and Germany announced today their intention of signing a political and military accord "to contribute effectively to assuring peace in Europe."

The announcement was made in a communique issued immediately after conclusion of two-day talks between Count Ciano, Italy's foreign minister, and Joachim von Ribbentrop, Germany's foreign minister.

The text of the communique follows:

"In the conversations which the foreign minister, Count Ciano, and the foreign minister of the Reich, von Ribbentrop, had on the sixth and seventh of May the present general political situation was examined with care.

"Perfect Identity" of View

"The perfect identity of view of the two governments was confirmed once again and it was decided to establish the relation of the two states of the axis definitely as well as from the formal point of view in a political and military pact.

"In this way Italy and Germany intend to contribute effectively to assuring peace in Europe."

Some surprise was occasioned by failure of the communique to refer to the German-Polish controversy over the Free City of Danzig and the Polish Corridor, which was understood to have formed an important subject in the talks.

Fascists, however, said they interpreted the announcement as meaning that Italy left Germany free to deal with the issue in her own way, promising her military support if a conflict should result.

But hope was expressed in Fascist circles peaceful settlement of German-Polish problems would be achieved. Fascists said they believed the Italian-German accord would tend to persuade Poland to adopt a less uncompromising attitude toward German demands.

The military accord was considered in political circles as intended above all to be a reply to what Fascists call "the French-British policy of encirclement of the totalitarian states."

Axis Put in Writing

The partnership known as the Rome-Berlin axis in which Reichsfuehrer Hitler and Premier Mussolini have worked together hitherto has been an informal, unwritten arrangement.

Decision to convert the axis into a formal political and military alliance insured that the two nations would fight side by side in any European war, it was said.

But though political circles regarded it as a step in a counterattack against the French-British front, an authoritative Fascist insisted the alliance was "not directed against anyone."

The treaty is to be known as the Pact of Milan and its precise terms probably will be agreed upon within two weeks, after which ratifications will be exchanged.

Some Fascists expressed the view Italy now would tend to exert a moderating influence on German policy in order to protect herself against becoming involved in a war

Duke 'Acting Up,' British Say; May Not Hear Radio Talk

By the United Press.

Paris, May 7.—The Duke of Windsor's decision to broadcast a peace message to the United States tomorrow from Verdun battlefield tonight aroused assertions in London circles that "it looks as if he is beginning to act up as soon as the King is out of the country."

Friends of the Duke asserted, however, that he actually had hesitated to accept the invitation for his first radio talk since his abdication farewell on December 11, 1936, because it coincided with departure of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth on their visit to Canada and the United States.

He finally consented, they said, when he was assured there would be no connection between his Verdun address and the trip of his younger brother and successor on the British throne.

The Duke's friends said he could be relied upon to make no reference to the trip of the King and Queen.

The Duke's transatlantic broadcast from the battlefield of Verdun will be at 10 p. m. G. M. T. (4 p. m. E. S. T.) over facilities of the National Broadcasting Co. It probably will not be broadcast in England.

On 2 Stations Here

The Duke of Windsor will be heard over stations WRC and WMAL and both N. B. C. networks from 4 to 4:30 this afternoon. The address will be rebroadcast by electrical transcription at 7:30 p. m. over Station WMAL and 10:30 p. m. over Station WRC tonight.

3 Missing Fliers Found in Florida

Miami, Fla., May 7 (ME).—A U. S. Naval Reserve plane today located three fliers, Ben Terry, Jack May and George Wells, all of Miami, missing for the last 30 hours. They took off without informing local airport officials of their destination.

The fliers were located 40 miles northwest of Miami in the swampy Everglades where their plane crashed. Terry suffered a broken arm. A civilian plane reached him and flew him to Miami for hospitalization. A rescue party left late today to get Wells and May.

Bishop of Berlin Defies Suppression

Berlin, May 7 (AP).—The Catholic bishop of Berlin, Count Konrad von Preysing, in a letter read at services today, urged Catholic parents to send their children to special classes for religious instruction being organized by the church, because of a ban on religious instruction in state schools.

The letter protested the suppression of the Catholic Youth movement and observed that a Catholic now virtually is without an opportunity to receive religious education.

Nazis Weigh Soviet Deal, Even Hint Polish Partition

By The Associated Press.

Berlin, May 7.—Talk of the possibility that Nazi Germany and Communist Russia might end their traditional enmity raised the question today of an entirely new alignment in European politics.

Diplomatic observers asserted abuse of bolshevism was being softpedaled.

They said there were two important reasons for a change of front:

Adjustment of the controversy with Poland to the satisfaction of Germany would be easier if the long quarrel with Soviet Russia were settled.

There have been few surface indications of a rapprochement between Germany and Russia, but there were many points of similarity in the idealogy of the two nations and "force of circumstances" seemed to be drawing them together.

Poland was cited as one of these "circumstances."

These observers agreed that if Germany and Russia could come to an understanding on how to deal with the state that lies between them, a way to ironing out their own differences would be made much easier.

The decision announced in Milan of Germany and Italy to sign a political and military accord was interpreted informally here as a frank warning to Poland and her friends.

The announcement caught the

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

MIRACLE MAN: One reason Grover Whalen and the World's Fair were able to perform such miracles was that in a pinch they could always call upon the War Department and the Army (usually via Washington) to a point which became vexatious . . . The straw that almost broke the Army's back was Whalen's request that a gigantic anti-aircraft searchlight be mounted atop one of his tall buildings.

Eleanor Holm
Whalen miracle

* * *

"But this searchlight is mounted on a big truck," protested the Colonel, a Mr. Eglin.

"Do you want us to run the truck up the side of the building, or just fly it up in a plane and drop it on the roof?"

"Yes," said Mr. Whalen, making a mental note to order a new bathing suit for Eleanor Holm trimmed in neon lights.

A few days later the Colonel applied for retirement, with a sigh of relief.

CAPITAL CAVIAR: A nervous Congressman has a bill up his sleeve requiring gadgets on all autos to limit speed to 25 miles per hour in town and 45 miles per hour in the country.

An eminent widow has forced a friend to promise to scatter her ashes over her husband's grave in Arlington Cemetery.

"—Whalen just asks the Army"

Lately there hasn't been so much about the ill-clad "one-third" in President Roosevelt's speeches . . . Maybe the other two-thirds have convinced him their troubles gnaw 'em, too . . . Incidentally, Senator La Follette is still laying for the upper two-thirds with his plan to up the income taxes on the comfortable and well-to-do families, $3,000 and up.

* * * *

DIPLOMATIC DIDOES: Surely sufficient notice has been served on the English (so think quite a few American statesmen in and out of Congress) not to expect any boatloads of American soldiers to come honking across the ocean in the next war . . . If they persist in such great expectations, and in working toward another A. E. F., they may lose their excellent chances of a steady stream of planes and munitions—if Americans get the false notion that planes now and men later are inseparable. It might be realistic to relinquish future hopes for present blessings.

* * * *

In fact, the smartest thing the British could do to assure themselves of a steady American source of supplies is to reassure the Americans openly in a loud tone of voice that they don't ever again expect troops . . .

They must never be able to say, if and when we turn down appeals for American troops, that we are "breaking an implied pledge."

England mustn't count on our sending our soldiers—but Germany mustn't count on our NOT sending any.

"—psychoanalyze his speeches"

It is shameful, of course, for anyone to suggest, as several statesmen privately have, that the Fuehrer, Chancellor and Aggrandizer of a great nation like Germany, should attach a lie-detector to his wrist every time he makes a speech . . .

For one thing, it might interfere with his gestures . . .

For another, I doubt that the Aggrandizer's pulse flutters much nowadays when he tells a whopper.

Probably his speeches should be psychoanalyzed rather than read.

Paste this inside your new straw hat:

Inner circle New Dealers are bemoaning the fact that too many of their stalwart shock troops are now tied down by the burdens of administrative jobs . . . This has reduced the total amount of "free energy" that can be rushed to any critical New Deal sector to save and fortify it.

* * * *

"There just isn't enough energy left in town," says the freest bundle of energy in the Capital, "to handle all the problems. So probably we'll have to have another spending program instead of solving such problems as railroads. Spending is a substitute for solution."

Apparently "free energy" gets lumbago after six years of a regime.

Woodring, Hull To Give Views On Neutrality

Hearings Will End This Week; Fight Over Air Bases Seen

Protracted hearings on what the Nation's neutrality policy should be will come to an end on Capitol Hill this week, while further funds to strengthen the Nation's defenses are expected to be voted.

Administration views on neutrality are awaited when Secretary of War Woodring appears at a closed meeting of the House Foreign Affairs Committee today and, it is expected, Secretary of State Hull will be heard behind closed doors tomorrow or Wednesday. The Administration in general favors greater discretion than is now provided for the President in determining this country's course in case of foreign wars.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will have as its neutrality witness Prof. James T. Shotwell, of Columbia University and trustee of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Fight Near Over Air Bases

Meanwhile, a fight neared in the House over a scheduled effort to add to the $770,000,000 naval appropriation bill an item to start work on small bases for long-range patrol planes on Midway, Palmyra and Johnston islands in the western Pacific.

Chairman Vinson of the House Naval Affairs Committee, said he would seek the funds as necessary to provide a "front-line" defense for Hawaii. There is opposition, however, on the grounds that the step would move this country's defense line too far into the Pacific.

The naval appropriation bill also provides funds for the start of work on two 45,000-ton battleships, the largest ever built by this country.

The National Committee to Keep America Out of Foreign Wars yesterday called on Americans to observe the week of June 11-18 as Keep-America-Out-of-Foreign-Wars Week.

Minitsers were urged to appeal for a cessation of the "war propaganda and hysteria that has been spreading like wildfire throughout the Nation."

Greater Air Defense Urged

Worcester, Mass., May 7 (AP).—Declaring New England would be the first point of attack by a European power, Brig. Gen. Edmund L. Daley today declared this section should demand $50,000,000 "sleep insurance" for adequate air protection in the event of war.

Gen. Daley, who will take command of the new U. S. Army department in the Caribbean next month, told a Hibernian Society communion breakfast that "the Atlantic has shrunk to a mere lake. We are a defensive nation. Our military objective is to keep war out of America.

"New England needs strong defensive ports, protected air bases, anti-aircraft batteries, and mobile units for protection of industrial centers."

Sen. Wagner Urges Health Bill as Economy Move

Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, said last night enactment of his national health bill "would result in the practice of economy in the highest sense of the term.

"The essential problem is not so much to increase the total now spent for health services from all sources," he said, "but rather to redirect those expenditures more wisely and more economically."

Wagner discussed his bill to provide Federal grants to the States for health activities in an address prepared for the American Forum of the Air, in which Representative Smith (Republican) of Ohio, also participated.

Smith said "our foremost duty is to restore the health of our economic body. The poor don't want charity. They want us politicians and bureaucrats to get off their backs, leave them alone so they can earn their own living, choose their own doctors and pay for their own medical service."

Mariners Tell Hopkins Bureau Is Anti-Union

New York, May 7.—Secretary of Commerce Hopkins was urged today by the National Maritime Union to end the power of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation of the Department of Commerce to suspend and revoke seamen's certificates for participation in strikes and other labor disputes. The union, a C. I. O. affiliate, charges that the bureau uses its suspension power in the time of labor difficulties to the advantage of steamship operators.

In a letter forwarded to Hopkins by Joseph Curran, president of the N. M. U., the secretary was asked for an interview "on the anti-union activities of the bureau."

"We contend that a vessel moored to a dock in a safe harbor is comparable to an industrial plant ashore and that seamen thereon have the same right to strike as shore workers," the letter states. "The bureau's actions in these cases are illegal usurpations of power and should be terminated."

Democrats Plan Pow-Wow To Heal Schism

Sen. Brown Heads Move for United Front at Elections

By the Associated Press.

A group of influential Senate Democrats, fearful that party squabbles may damage Democratic chances in 1940, were reported yesterday to be considering calling a "harmony meeting" at which differences could be threshed out.

The idea was said to have originated with Chairman Brown (Democrat), of Michigan, of the Senatorial Campaign Committee. It is this belief that if Democrats who fought bitterly on opposite sides of the Supreme Court and Government reorganization battles last year would sit down together and talk over their varying views of party problems they might be able to come to an understanding.

Asked about the report, Brown said he probably would call the meeting soon.

One loyal administration supporter—Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), Washington—said he felt that much of the intra-party bitterness already was disappearing.

"The old sectional lines are breaking down," he told reporters. "Senators are generally more cordial and friendly to each other, and by the next session there should be general harmony in the party."

Brown said he hoped to arrange a series of speeches by Senators this summer, designed to rebuild party morale, as a preliminary to extensive campaign speechmaking of next year.

Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, the Democratic floor leader, was said to have sought the counsel of several anti-Administration Democrats on recent legislation in an effort to promote party harmony.

There was some speculation among Senators over the position President Roosevelt would take toward any harmony efforts. He has repeatedly contended in public addresses that the party must remain "liberal" and has suggested that those who disagree join the Republicans.

Back Chicago for Conventions

By the United Press.

Chicago is favored by top-flight Democratic and Republican leaders in Congress as the site of the 1940 Presidential nominating conventions, a survey revealed last night.

The place and date of the meetings will be selected by the national committees of both parties in December.

Backstage maneuvering already has been started by Illinois politicians and business men who reason, perhaps correctly, that the White House race will be decided in the nation's "bread basket" and that both parties will want to initiate their campaign in that area.

Other cities mentioned to date as potential convention sites are Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Detroit, St. Louis and Kansas City, Mo. The presence of world fairs in San Francisco and New York City is operating against those cities.

Heretofore Republicans have met first, nominated a candidate for the Presidency and Vice Presidency and drafted a platform for them. Democrats gauged the Nation's reaction to the various G. O. P. planks and tried to profit from errors made by the pace setters.

The situation will be reversed in 1940 if Congressional Republicans make their will felt.

Quick Action By Senate Seen On Farm Bill

Measure Up Today; President Completing New Reorganization

By the Associated Press.

Without relaxing the vigilance with which it has pursued the twin issues of neutrality and national defense, Congress will take time out today to consider doing something handsome—in the way of $832,000,000 in subsidy payments—for the farmer.

The Senate will take up the $1,216,528,000 Agriculture Department Appropriations bill.

Meantime, President Roosevelt is scheduled to complete, at a conference with his legislative advisors, the draft of an interdepartmental reorganization order, expected to be his final proposal of this nature for this session of Congress.

To Shift Bureaus

The order will shift some bureaus from one department to another, but there has been no hint as to reorganization orders become effective 60 days after being sent to Congress, unless both houses disapprove.

Farm leaders expected little Senate opposition to the huge Agricultural Appropriations bill, having averted a threatened split in the farm bloc by including $113,000,000 for crop surplus removal operations along with $225,000,000 for so-called "parity payments." Both of these items were added to the House-approved figure of $500,000,000 for soil conservation payments.

Senator Russell (Democrat), Georgia, who presided at committee hearings on the bill, predicted there "will not be more than 15 or 20 votes against it."

"We may be able to get it through Monday or Tuesday," he said.

Senator Bankhead (Democrat), of Alabama, who hopes to add a cotton export subsidy provision to the bill, said he thought the Senate would approve the measure "in two or three days."

$381,000,0000 Increase

As approved by the Senate Committee, the bill carries $381,000,000 more than was voted by the House and is $375,000,000 above budget estimates.

Some senators said they believed that if the bill were finally approved at that figure, President Roosevelt would demand processing taxes to meet a part of the cost.

Farm leaders, however, said that if this issue was raised, they would reply that no suggestions for tax increases accompanied requests for increased defense appropriations.

Mayor LaGuardia, of New York will be a witness today in the investigation of the PWA being conducted by a House Appropriations subcommittee in a search for improved methods of distributing relief.

Other mayors scheduled to appear are Mayors Harold H. Burton, of Cleveland; Daniel W. Hoan, of Milwaukee; Edward J. Kelly, of Chicago; Joseph D. Scholtz, of Louisville; Ross D. Rogers, of Amarillo, Texas; Richard W. Reading, of Detroit; and Maurice J. Tobin, of Boston.

13 Wholesale Grocery Firms Cited by FTC

Robinson-Patman Act Barring Price Rebates Is Basis of Charges

By International News Service.

Thirteen of the Nation's biggest wholesale dealers in foodstuffs, groceries and allied products were cited by the Federal Trade Commission yesterday on charges of violation of the brokerage section of the Robinson-Patman fair-price act.

Named as respondents were:

As buyers—S. M. Flickinger Co., Inc., Buffalo; Julliard Cockcrof Corporation, Watsonville, Calif.; Laurens Bros., Inc., New Bedford, Mass.; West Coast Grocery Co., Tacoma, Wash.; H. O. Wooten Grocery Co., Abilene, Tex., and Nash-Finch Co., Minneapolis.

As sellers—Diamond Match Co., New York; Morton Salt Co., Chicago; Quaker Oats Co., Chicago; Ralston-Purina Co., St. Louis; Wesson Oil & Snowdrift Co., Inc., New Orleans; Standard Rice Co., Houston, and Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati.

The two groups, the commission charged, engage in buying and selling of foodstuffs and groceries through the medium of Modern Marketing Service, Inc., of Chicago, and formerly through the Red & White Corporation of the same address.

The FTC described the group of sellers as representing "a large class of manufacturers, processors and producers selling foodstuffs, groceries and allied products to the buyer respondents and other buyers," through Modern Marketing Service.

The buyers are wholesale grocers and stockholders of the Red & White Corp., the FTC reported.

The Marketing Service, it is charged, while acting as agent for the buyers, receives brokerage fees or commissions from the sellers which are "transmitted to the buyer group in the form of services," but that Marketing Service actually renders the sellers no service. This, the FTC charges, is in violation to the fair-price act.

Priest Pits Prayer Against Propaganda

Calls on Catholics to Unite to Save U. S. From War Campaign

Catholics must unite in prayer to save America from war-encouraging propagandists, the Rev. John P. Gallagher, S. J., yesterday warned 1,500 persons at a Washington Sodality peace rally at the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, Catholic University.

Meanwhile, other special Catholic rites were centered at the Shrine of the Blessed Sacrament Church, Chevy Chase Circle, where Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of Baltimore, confirmed a class of 250 children, and at St. Dominic's Church, Sixth and E streets southwest, where a solemn rosary novena was climaxed with colorful ceremonies.

"The press and the screen seem united in a campaign to involve us in what they call European dictatorship," Father Gallagher charged, "while they never mention the worse atrocities of Communist Russia."

Sodalities Furnish Music

Solemn benediction of the most blessed sacrament was another feature of the service, with the Rev. Edward P. McAdams as celebrant; the Rev. Richard J. Barron, deacon; the Rev. E. Robert Arthur, subdeacon; the Rev. Charles J. Salkavich, deacon of exposition. The Rev. J. J. Clark gave the recitation of the rosary for "peace among nations."

Music for the service was furnished by the Gonzaga orchestra, directed by the Rev. Robert E. Lowe, and the Sodality Union Choir, conducted by Miss Margaret Walsh. Miss Margaret Breen, of St. Peter's Church Sodality, was organist. Among guests was Miss Mary Mattingly, president of the Sodality Union. Miss Helen Dolan, president of St. Martin's Sodality, was chairman of ushers.

The confirmation service at the Shrine of the Blessed Sacrament Church opened with a procession from the parochial school into the church, with 300 men of the parish serving as guard of honor to Archbishop Curley.

May Queen Crowned

Also marching were participating priests, including the Very Rev. Arthur O'Leary, president of Georgetown University; Mgr. Edward A. Duff, retired chaplain of the United States Navy; the Rev. Charles R. O'Hara, Holy Comforter rector; the Rev. James A. Smyth, pastor of the Shrine of the Sacred Heart.

Also taking part were the Rev. Thomas G. Smyth, the Rev. Thomas J. Crowley and the Rev. Charles D. Gorman, pastor and assistant pastors of the host parish. Father O'Hara and Father James A. Smyth assisted the archbishop at rites of solemn benediction after confirmation.

The crowning of Margaret Maggio as May queen following an outdoor Rosary procession highlighted the services at St. Dominic's Church, where the Rev. W. R. Bonniwell, O. P., director of the Preachers' Institute of the Dominican College, Catholic University, delivered the main address and propounced solemn benediction and the papal blessing.

Participating priests of the parish were the Rev. Bernard A. A. McKeon, O. P.; the Rev. Camillus A. Musselman, O. P.; the Rev. James A. Fleming, O. P., and the Rev. Norbert Connell, O. P.

Bonneville Dam Engineer Says Ickes Fired Him

By the Associated Press.

Seattle, May 7.—R. W. Beck, engineer for the Bonneville Dam Administration, said today he had been dismissed by Secretary of the Interior Ickes.

The dismissal followed publication of a letter which Beck declared had been written by the late J. D. Ross, Bonneville administrator, opposing the use of condemnation suits by public utility districts in acquiring properties of private utilities in Oregon and Washington. Beck, who presented the letter for publication to newspapers, said it had not been mailed by Ross, although it had been written last January.

Beck made public an exchange of telegrams in which Ickes reprimanded him for publishing the Ross letter and later announced his dismissal after Beck had stated his intention to continue to advise public utility districts.

II—In all but two areas overcrowded homes elbow others.

This, the second of a series of articles on conditions in the Capital, revealing the extremes of social and health conditions. The third article will appear tomorrow.

By Eugene Pharo.

Neighborhood by neighborhood, the research department of the Washington Council of Social Agencies has studied overcrowding in the city's dwelling units—it hesitates to call some of them homes.

What it discovered, charted by census tracts, appears roughly in the accompanying map. As will appear in this series, the picture it presents give an early indication of the location of the heaviest proportions of disease, death, vice and crime. In nearly every neighborhood poverty and comfort exist not only side by side, but virtually arm in arm.

The figure of 1.51 persons or more per room is a standard approximation for overcrowding. In large dwellings contained a number of persons it represents a more serious condition than in small houses. But in all cases it denotes less than the desirable room from the point of view of physical and social health. Only three areas indicate that all the residents have sufficient space, and one of them is St. Elizabeths Hospital for mental patients. The other two are bounded in one instance by Rock Creek and Sixteenth street and Woodley road and Gallatin street, and in the other by portions of Cleveland and Wisconsin avenues, Whitehaven street and Woodley road, and Thirty-fourth street. The Naval Observatory occupies a large portion of the second tract, and Rock Creek Parkway part of the first.

Some degree of overcrowding exists in every other part of the city. In three tracts it is more than 15 per cent, although in 13 it is less than one per cent. Seven show more than 10 per cent in addition to the most crowded three.

The greatest proportion of overcrowding occurs in dwelling units in an area bounded on the south by the Mall, on the west by Fifteenth street, on the east by Fifth and Sixth streets, and at the north by parts of Massachusetts avenue, Eleventh street, S street, Fourteenth street, and Vermont avenue. This area contains a great many buildings that are not dwelling units. Yet there were reported 3,517 dwelling units, of which 561 housed 1.51 or more persons per room.

Further details of the housing picture, and what agencies are working to improve it, will be told in later articles.

Douglas, Hopkins Confer on Yacht With Roosevelt

By the United Press.

President Roosevelt, Associate Justice Douglas, of the Supreme Court, and Secretary of Commerce Hopkins sailed aboard the Presidential yacht late yesterday for an overnight cruise on the Potomac River. They will return early today.

Although the White House described the trip as a pleasure voyage, it was learned that the President plans to have a thorough discussion of current business conditions with Hopkins and Douglas.

Others aboard the yacht included Mrs. Douglas, Miss Marguerite Lehand, the President's private secretary, and Miss Grace Tulley, assistant to Miss Lehand.

Four More Bodies To Be Exhumed in Murder Inquiry

Philadelphia, May 7 (AP).—Investigators of Philadelphia's murder-for-insurance syndicate announced tonight four additional bodies will be raised from their graves within a few days to determine if cause of death was poison.

Autopsies already have been performed on nine. Poison, of various kinds, was discovered in eight. The ninth was run down and killed by an automobile—intentionally, detectives have said.

One grave to be opened is that of Mrs. Lena Winkleman, only woman so far linked to the ring as a victim. But investigators have indicated there probably were many other women among the hundred or more persons believed to have been put to death over a ten-year period for insurance.

The league's second annual convention will be held in the Mayflower Hotel here May 19 and 20.

Geddes Envisions Drunk-Proof, 100 M.P.H. Road

New York, May 7 (AP).—A national highway system of 1960 which would permit 100-mile-an-hour speeds, turns at 50 miles an hour and eliminate the menace of blowouts, collisions, drunks and road hogs was envisioned today by designer Norman Bel Geddes.

Geddes disclosed his plan in outline after five years of study and recent talks with President Roosevelt and Federal highway officials.

The fundamentals of the plan are: An integrated national highway system under one central authority; complete segregation of traffic into individual lanes; three required speeds—50, 75 and 100 miles an hour.

Ruhland Finds Rest Conducive To Happy Life

The fifth most important thing in life is rest, Health Officer George C. Ruhland declared yesterday.

Rest, which follows air, water, food and exercise in the scheme of things, must be alternated with activity, he said.

"The ideal form of rest is sleep and the best time for sleep is at night," he added.

Get eight hours of sleep regularly, rest after each meal, go to bed on an empty stomach and keep healthy, Dr. Ruhland advised.

Temperance Demanded by Bishop Hughes

Warns Politicians Methodism Stands Against Liquor Trade

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, May 7.—Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, of Washington, president of the Methodist Episcopal Church's Board of Temperance and a leader in the uniting conference here, served notice on the Nation's political parties today that Methodism regards the liquor question as an alive and demanding issue.

Bishop Hughes told 5,000 persons at an assembly the cause of temperance should not be abandoned because the prohibition amendment had been repealed.

"They who say liquor traffic is not an issue today are both blind and deaf. For more than a century the three denominations (of Methodism) have stood against liquor. We serve notice on the major political parties that God demands of us a holy crusade."

Sees Temperance Need

He declared the need for temperance had been growing and charged drinking among women had "grown ten times over."

"Unless we stop this rising wave of drunkenness," he said, "in one more decade we'll be the most drunken nation God ever saw staggering over this planet."

Holding liquor consumption responsible for highway accidents, robbery, lust and murder, Bishop Hughes suggested the church should present a constructive program, with thousands of groups organized in every city and village.

Social Creed Proposed

A proposed social creed, which asks exemption from military service of "all conscientious objectors who may be members of the Methodist Church," is due for debate as the conference embarks tomorrow on a schedule of three sessions a day to complete its work by Wednesday.

Other points in the creed include regulation of working conditions of women, abolition of child labor, security for old age, the right of employes and employers alike to organize for collective bargaining and social action, the safeguarding of the farmer and his family and the preservation of all values of rural life.

American Airman With China Killed

Chungking, China, May 7 (AP).—Chinese authorities today announced the death of George Weigle, of Alabama, a flier with the Chinese Air Force, in an air crash last Thursday.

Weigle was the only foreigner remaining with the air force after the international volunteer bombing squadron was disbanded.

Weigle formerly flew for the republicans in the Spanish Civil war but arrived in China six months ago as a test pilot.

20 Killed and 50 Hurt In Mexican Clash

Mexico City, May 7 (INS).—Twenty men were killed and 50 injured today in a clash between agrarians and troops at Atencingo in the state of Puebla.

The battle developed from an invasion by the agrarians of an expropriated hacienda that formerly belonged to the American consular agent, William C. Jenkins. Troops, approaching the estate to evict the invaders, were ambushed.

2,000 Battle Michigan Forest Fires

Worst Blaze in Years Sweeps 40,000 Acres; Incendiarist Sought

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Mich., May 7.—More than 2,000 persons were combatting the worst forest fire in Michigan in many years tonight. Several smaller blazes also were reported.

The major fire, centered in Presque Isle State Forest, had burned over more than 40,000 acres.

Harold Titus, member of the State conservation commission, said, "this was the greatest loss from forest fires in recent Michigan history." He attributed both the major fire and the lesser ones to incendiarism.

Michigan's entire forest fire loss in 1937 was 16,000 acres, less than half the area of the present blaze, which raged out of control fanned by a 33-mile-an-hour wind.

All available equipment in lower Michigan was pressed into service.

The temperature in the fire zone was 89 and the humidity was low. Fire fighters pinned some hopes in forecasts of local thundershowers.

The big fire was reported headed toward Millersburg, in Presque Isle County, but there was no alarm yet for the town's safety. Occupants of Canada Creek Ranch, a hunting and fishing camp 12 miles south of Onaway, were ordered to evacuate.

Ray Hunt, of the Conservation office at Atlanta, said the fire broke out simultaneously in several spots and he was convinced it was incendiary. District Supervisor Charles A. Eagle announced he expected to arrest a suspect for questioning momentarily.

'Suicide' Jones Leaps From 24,468 Ft. in Air

The National Aeronautical Association has advised Willie (Suicide) Jones, Chicago colored man, that examination of a barograph carried in a plane from which Jones made a parachute jump March 2 showed he had leaped from an altitude of 24,468 feet.

Association officials, emphasizing that no official records are kept of parachute jumps, said the highest previous jump recorded in this country, 22,733 feet, was made by Smaranda Braesco, a woman, May 19, 1932, at Oakland, Calif.

Pius Renews His Appeal For Peace

will, peace in souls troubled by the appeals and seductions of false doctrines, peace among nations trembling in unceasing anxiety descend from heaven to earth through the hand of the Immaculate Virgin.

"If you have come here to hold your Eucharistic session it is especially to celebrate the centenary of an event ever memorable for the church and for France.

"A century ago the first Bishop of Algiers was installed in his cathedral. Thus was reborn after 800 years of apparent death, this ecclesiastical province of Africa which had counted 500 bishops and which in the lists of its martyrs, of its Popes and its virgins included the incomparable doctor of Hippo, Augustine, one of the most brilliant geniuses that God has ever given to the church and to the world.

"But in 1839 the white city of Algiers flaunted its terraces upon the sea as a defiance to Christian peoples; Algiers, the city of tears and blood where thousands of captives had wept, prayed, suffered and given their lives for Christ, counted but four priests.

"Now with the Cross of Christ rising from one of its minarets, Algiers becomes the luminous gateway through which the light of revelation penetrates with growing rapidity to the heart of the Black Continent.

"Admirable renaissance, new life, overflow of supernatural vigor! Today numerous bishops and apostolic vicars, hundreds of priests from various Christian nations or native families and several million faithful attest throughout Africa the eternal youth of the church, the inexhaustible fecundity of divine grace served by human efforts.

"That is why our benediction goes out affectionately toward you sons of that France whose great religious destinies we were permitted to recall two years ago under the roof of Notre Dame in Paris.

"But this benediction goes still further: To you neophytes and catechists scattered through the missions of Africa and finally to all you men whose souls like ours have been redeemed by the blood of God become man.

"All nations have been given Jesus Christ as a heritage and Providence has constituted us the guardians of this heritage; God has made us the pastor and the father of this humanity.

"May divine benediction, the fruit of blood shed for us by the Saviour, hidden but present in the Eucharist, descend upon all of you: The benediction of Almighty God, Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Amen."

Canterbury to Speak

London, May 7 (U.P.).—The Archbishop of Canterbury is preparing an announcement regarding his appeal to Pope Pius XII to assume leadership of a united front of "all Christendom" to work for world peace, it was understood tonight.

Pact Surprises Rome

Rome, May 7.—Decision to strengthen the Rome-Berlin axis by a political and military treaty came as a sharp surprise, even to most Italian political commentators, who, in today's press, had decisively rejected the idea of any new agreement or modification of existing understandings. Virginio Gayda, writing in an authoritative tone in La Voce d'Italia, even said:

"It may be said of the Milan meeting that no new gesture or fact of either general or specific bearing will result. The moment is not favorable for new initiative. Things already have been too disturbed by the Anglo-French move."

If Gayda was informed correctly, then for some reason the Italian attitude changed over night, and with this change the motive for further discussion apparently disappeared. This pointed strongly to the probability that Reichsfuehrer Hitler himself requested that military engagements be assumed without further delay.

French Snub Blamed

Paris, May 7 (U.P.).—Announcement of a military alliance between Italy and Germany was reported in British diplomatic circles tonight to have followed closely upon a French refusal of Premier Mussolini's terms for settling his Mediterranean demands.

These terms, which Italy previously had declined to state, were reported to have been:

Two seats for Italy on the board controlling the Suez Canal; a free port for Italy at Djibouti; a new arrangement regarding operation of the French-owned railroad between Djibouti and Addis Ababa; and a new convention to regulate the status and rights of the Italian population in Tunis.

Italy, according to these diplomats, made no territorial claims of any kind against France. There was no confirmation in official French quarters of the report.

Peale's Portrait of Lafayette Restored To Stratford Hall After Century's Absence

for Light Horse Harry Lee, himself a general barely 20. The two, said the Ambassador, were "neither politicians nor economists, but they were enthusiasts, certainly craving for glory, but also aiming at establishing a better future."

And Count de Quentin recalled Lafayette's prophetic words to his child bride when he first sailed for this young nation: "The happiness of America is intimately bound with the happiness of humanity. She is going to become a cherished and safe asylum of tolerance and equality and of peaceful liberty."

He traced briefly the descendants of Lafayette and of Lee, to the Chambrun brothers today and to Robert E. Lee, "a great soldier, a noble character and a sincere patriot." And of the two young generals, American and French, who fought together and grew to love each other in the Revolution, de St. Quentin said:

"As for us, Americans and Frenchmen, who are gathered here today, don't you think that we can say to the young officers I just welcomed, to the green jacket and to the blue coat: 'Dear Harry, dear Gilbert, you were right indeed. There exists today between our nations, as there was between you two in the old days, an everlasting friendship that will stand in bad and even in good fortune, that will help the cause of liberty and the cause of peace."

Painting Sold in 1826

The portrait's checkered career since it was presented by Lafayette to Lee probably as a wedding gift in 1784, was traced by Edwain S. Berry, nephew of Thomas Clagett Berry, of California, who presented it to the foundation. The painting, Berry said, was inherited by Maj. Henry Lee, eldest son of Light Horse Harry and hung at Stratford until 1826 or 1827. It then was sold, with other works of art at Stratford, to Lee's friend, William Clark Somerville, of St. Mary's County, Md.

By Somerville's will, it was left to his brother, Henry Vernon Somerville, from whose estate it was inherited or purchased by Luke Tiernan Brien, who left it, when he went to join the Confederate Army, with his friend, Washington Berry, of Paradise Farm, Md. After the war, it was presented to Washington Berry's son, Tiernan Brien Berry, who took it to California, where it has remained since in the Berry family. It was discovered there by Miss Ethel Armes in the course of research for the foundation and was presented to the foundation by Thomas Clagett Berry, its owner.

Gen. Harbord Accepts Portrait

The portrait was accepted for the foundation by Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, U. S. Army, retired.

Mrs. Charles D. Lanier, president of the Robert E. Lee Foundation, presided, and the Rev. C. E. Buxton pronounced the invocation and the benediction.

To Virginians, Stratford, with its two outflung wings and its rich brown against the green of its lawns, is important chiefly as the childhood home of Robert E. Lee.

Lafayette's portrait will hang on the wall where Light Horse Harry Lee once placed it, to remind visitors to this shrine of a friendship that endured through war, through revolution, through exile and disaster and beyond death itself.

Italy, Reich To Put 'Axis' In Writing

Axis

in which her own interests were not directly at stake.

They said it was likely Italy would renew efforts to promote a peaceful settlement of the German-Polish dispute.

It was pointed out that whereas until now Mussolini had a friendly right to counsel Hitler on his policy toward Poland, under the new treaty he will have a formal and legal basis for intervening.

Although it was conceded generally in political circles, that a solution of the German-Polish dispute acceptable to both nations might be difficult, it was not regarded as impossible.

Reich to Wait on Poland

Virginio Gayda, authoritative Fascist editor, gave an assurance that Hitler had no intention of "precipitating events" in Danzig. Gayda, who often has inside information, said Germany, though desiring that the Danzig problem be decided by the people of the Free City, would wait for Poland to resume negotiations and was hopeful Britain and France would "recognize their error and responsibility in time and leave Poland free to lead her own life."

(This apparently was a reference to the British-French pledge to aid Poland in event of an attack on her independence.)

"But this German moderation," Gayda warned, "must not be interpreted as encouragement of undue intransigeance."

English, French Blamed

The editor said, however, that the Danzig problem was in an acute stage and he blamed Anglo-French action in getting Poland into their front for the situation.

Mussolini was understood to have brought strong pressure on Hitler for moderation toward Poland.

The communique did not specify when the new agreement would be negotiated.

It was assumed, however, that its terms already had been decided upon at conferences Mussolini and Ciano had with Marshal Goering, Hitler's chief aide, in the last month and in staff talks which still are in progress between Col. Gen. Walther von Brauchitsch, chief of staff of the German army, and Gen. Alberto Pariani, chief of staff of the Italian army and undersecretary of war.

Milan, Italy, May 7 (AP).—The foreign ministers of Italy and Germany, Count Ciano and Joachim von Ribbentrop, conversed in English throughout their two-day conference which ended today. They chose English in preference to French, the other language they have in common.

Nazis Warships in Italy

Genoa, Italy, May 7 (AP).—Two German destroyers docked here today, giving rise to speculation whether some of the Nazi warships assigned to Mediterranean waters would be based in Italy under the new Rome-Berlin military alliance.

Danzig May Ask Union

Free City of Danzig, May 7 (AP).—The impression grew in Nazi quarters tonight that the Danzig Senate soon would declare the Free City a part of Germany and invite German authorities in neighboring East Prussia to take over the government.

Thus Danzigers, ostensibly without Reichefuehrer Hitler having moved a finger, would dispose of their own future in accordance with the principle of self-determination.

This, however, raised the question whether the Poles would let loose their guns trained on Danzig should the Senate declare the Free City a part of Germany.

The more confident Nazis answered "no" while some Poles said "yes." Nazis said that for Poland to open fire would put the stigma of military aggression upon Warsaw.

Members of the Danzig government said they did not take seriously suggestions from Berlin and Rome that a plebiscite be held as a method of solution as "entirely unnecessary."

Goering Attacks Poles

Essen, Germany, May 7 (U.P.).—Marshal Goering's newspaper, the Essener National Zeitung, today accused Poland of willingness to surrender the Polish Corridor if Germany would bring about Poland's acquisition of Lithuania.

The paper warned Poland to cease "acts of violence against the German minority," particularly in the Corridor, and threatened reprisals.

Russia and Turkey Join in Military Accord; Anglo-Turkish Defense Pact Likely Today

By International News Service.

Ankara, May 7.—Turkey and Soviet Russia tonight announced an agreement almost equivalent to a military alliance, forging a new and strategically important link in the "peace chain" promoted by Great Britain and France.

On the heels of yesterday's reports that an Anglo-Turkish mutual defense pact may be announced tomorrow in Ankara and London, the Turkish foreign office issued a communique on the results of conversations last week with the Soviet Vice Commissar of Foreign Affairs Vladimir Potemkin.

A "full identity of views" was obtained in the conversations between Potemkin and Turkish Foreign Minister Sukru Saracoglu, the communique said. It added:

"The Soviet Union and Turkey have mutually determined to strengthen still further the solid bonds which link the two states and which constitute a precious pledge to the cause of peace, to which cause these two states are firmly attached."

Details Withheld

Details of the new Turko-Soviet understanding were withheld. It was reliably understood, however, that Potemkin committed his country to aid Turkey in the event the all-important Dardanelles are attacked, or if any other Turkish territory becomes the object of aggression.

Turkey in exchange was said to have promised to permit use of the Dardanelles Strait by the Soviet Black Sea fleet, the British and French navies in any common defense of Poland, Rumania, Greece and the eastern Mediterranean, provided Russia finally reaches an agreement with Britain.

The Ankara communique enhanced the prospect of bringing both Turkey and Russia into collaboration with the Anglo-French anti-aggression front.

[The newspaper Akcham, which yesterday published a report that British-Turkish negotiations "have succeeded," was ordered by the government to suspend publication for an indefinite period, the Associated Press reported.—Editor's Note.]

Nazis Appear Stalemated

The Potemkin-Saracoglu conferences also seemed to have stalemated Germany's efforts to prevent Turkey—the Reich's World War ally—from joining hands with the western powers and Russia. Reichsfuehrer Hitler recently sent his ace diplomat, Franz von Papen, to Ankara as ambassador for the apparent purpose of pushing these efforts.

Despite the London announcement that they were "premature," reports persisted in Ankara that an Anglo-Turkish reciprocal defense agreement is about to be announced and that it will cover certain specified areas of the eastern Mediterranean. Disclosure of this pact, it was said without confirmation, may be made simultaneously tomorrow in London and Ankara either by communiques or in the Parliaments of Britain and Turkey.

Sofia, Bulgaria, May 7 (AP).—Vladimir Potemkin, Soviet Russia's vice commissar of foreign affairs, and King Boris III held a lengthy conference today at which it was believed they discussed a projected Black Sea pact.

The Soviet Diplomat, who came here from Ankara, also talked with Premier George Kiosseivanoff of Bulgaria.

The Black Sea pact advocated by Russia, so far as is known here, calls for a non-aggression agreement among the Soviet Union, Rumania, Turkey and Bulgaria.

It has been reported that Moscow was interested in having Rumania yield to Bulgarian demands for the return of the Dobruja area, which Bulgaria lost after the World War, to make Sofia more receptive to such a plan.

Potemkin was scheduled to leave late tonight for Bucharest.

Soterios Nicholson, Washington lawyer, who has just returned from Greece, said last night that the ancient land has gone American.

"On arrival," he said, "one rides in an American-made automobile, writes his letters on an American-made typewriter, or with an American fountain pen on American paper, eats in the best Greek-American restaurants, has his clothes cleaned in an up-to-date American establishment, the machinery of which has been shipped from the States, and reads the usual road signs of American firms."

Nicholson, born in Greece in 1885, was one of 650 members of Ahepa who went to Athens on the tenth annual pilgrimage of that society.

Chinese Flee Chungking; Fear New Air Raids

Chungking, May 7 (AP).—Refugees streamed from this desolated provisional capital of China today as Gen. Chiang Kai-shek pushed a drive to move its entire civilian population.

Fires set by repeated Japanese air raids last Thursday and Friday have been brought under control but the inhabitants are in dread of new air attacks which the Japanese have threatened "until the Chinese government is smashed."

(Informed sources in Hongkong said Saturday Chiang was preparing quickly to transfer the government to Chengtu, Szechwan province capital 175 miles northwest.

It was estimated that the total population was about 300,000—remnants of almost 2,000,000 three days ago. Among those remaining were 60 Americans.

Housecleaning Hint About Moths

To do a thorough job and get rid of moths, here's what to do. First, clean out all trunks, drawers and closets. Cracks and crevices in closets and clothes containers should be promptly dusted and then sprayed with Bee Brand Insect Spray which kills moths in all stages—from egg to adult. Expose all garments to sunlight, brush thoroughly and have dry cleaned or steam pressed. 'Axis' Accord Kills British Hopes of Split

Weaning of Italy From German Friendship Now Held Impossible

By the Associated Press.

London, May 7.—Announcement that Italy and Germany had decided to become allies in a formal military pact was interpreted here tonight as a blow against the British-French front.

This crushed lingering hopes in some quarters of the British government of driving a "wedge" between the Rome-Berlin axis partners by weaning Italy away from her friendship with Germany.

At the same time there were unofficial reports of a possible breakdown in the prolonged negotiations between Britain and Soviet Russia designed to bring the Soviet Union into the French-British line-up.

Britain sent a note yesterday to Moscow answering what was said to be Russia's demand that Britain and France join her in a triple alliance. Unofficial reports here said Britain had refused to go that far and had offered that the three powers guarantee Central and Southern Europe's small states against aggression.

Of reports that Germany might demand a plebiscite in her dispute with Poland over the Free City of Danzig, it was said it would be up to Poland to decide what stand to take. But since Danzig is more than 90 per cent German, some observers believe Britain might urge Poland to try to conciliate.

Announcement of the increasing Italian-German solidarity was seen also as an indication that Reichsfuehrer Hitler would have Premier Mussolini's full backing in his demands on Poland.

London's negotiations with Turkey, meanwhile, were reported to have progressed rapidly but it was believed no announcement of a formal agreement would be made until conclusion of the British-Russian conversations.

Puts Pressure On Poles

Paris, May 7 (AP).—French diplomatic sources today expressed belief conversion of the Rome-Berlin axis into a formal military alliance was designed to stampede Poland into giving in to Germany.

The announcement also effectively served notice on France and Britain, these sources said, that there was no hope now of winning Italy away from Germany.

There also was speculation as to the price Germany may have had to pay for what was considered a flat go-ahead to clean up the Polish question with Italy's close support.

Warsaw Unimpressed

Warsaw, May 7 (AP).—Foreign diplomatic circles expressed the view here today that Poland's attitude would not be swayed by the announcement of a new German-Italian military alliance.

No official Polish comment was available, but unofficial circles took the view that Reichsfuehrer Hitler had been insistent on the signing of a new pact with Italy because of irritation over reports that Britain was proving successful in restoring Anglo-Italian friendship.

Japan Requested To Seek Halliburton

San Francisco, May 7 (AP).—The Richard Halliburton Expedition management asked Japan today to send an aircraft carrier and war planes into the Pacific Ocean to hunt the American adventurer-author and his missing Chinese junk.

"Halliburton always liked the Japanese," said Wilfred Crowell, management spokesman. "We hope they'll go to his rescue. The expedition has not been heard from since March 23.

the day's racing contests and exhibitions of fancy flying, sponsored by the Washington Air Derby Association and the Washington Board of Trade.

The women's 5-mile race in planes with engines of 40 horsepower was captured by Miss Frigo, an employe of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, who holds several District women's flying records. George Kalec took first honors in both men's 5-mile races for planes of 40 and 50 horsepower.

New Plane Tried Out

The overflowing crowd, including air attaches of the Latin American embassies and legations, watched eagerly as Test Pilot Robert Saunders tried out a tiny private plane, equipped with radically new tricycle landing gear. Vincent "Squeek Burnett earned cheer after cheer as he showed the folks below a few of the "acrobatics" that had won him the international championship at Havana last January.

The meet was opened shortly after noon with flag-raising ceremonies and a welcoming address by Francis G. Addison, jr., past president of the Washington Board of Trade.

Races and winners were as follows:

Women's 5-mile race in planes with engines of not more than 40 horsepower, Miss Frigo, first; Mrs. Mary Foley Benson, second; Miss Mary Hall, third. Five-mile race for men flying planes of not more than 50 horsepower, Kalec, first, Herbert Berl, second; R. G. Herring, third. Ten-mile race for planes weighing not more than 3,000 pounds, Dr. Dudley King, first; John E. Dorr, second; Miss Clement, third. Nazis Weigh Pact With Russia, Even Hint Partition of Poland

German

German public unawares.

Informed sourmes said the feeling that Germany's relations with Russian were to undergo a definite improvement soon was no obstacle to closer Italian co-operation with Germany. Italian relations with Russia, despite the anti-comintern pact, were said to be a little better than they were a few months ago.

Intimations of a German suggestion for plebiscite in Danzig today were replaced by an impression that Russia might not approve such a solution and speculation revolved about other proposals which might be offered to Russia.

The morst far-fetched of these, which no one in authority would discuss, was a "partition of Poland."

The Polish-British mutual assistance pact stood in the way of such action, not to mention the Polish army, but commentators observed that German diplomacy with a little Russian good will might accomplish the task.

A German view was that Russia had made a gesture of good will through the departure of Maxim Litvinoff from the post of commissar of foreign relations and that vague feelers in direction of a rapprochement were entirely within the realm of possibility.

Moscow, May 7 (AP).—Reports of a trend toward better relations between Germany and Soviet Russia were neither denied nor confirmed here tonight.

Observers did not exclude possibility of a Nazi maneuver to pull Russia away from the British-French bloc, but neither did they exclude possibility of a Russian maneuver to swing France and Britain into line by letting them believe Hitler had made an attractive approach to Moscow.

Those watching for signs of rapprochement between Berlin and Moscow are inclined to regard a reconciliation as inevitable.

They emphasize that scarcely seven weeks after Joseph Stalin denounced foreign efforts to poison the atmosphere between the two nations, Maxim Litvinoff, who was poison in the eyes of Nazis, suddenly relinquished the Russian foreign portfolio.

An article in the magazine Party Construction the day after Litvinoff's retirement argued that Hitler's frequent denunciations of Moscow merely were part of a plan to coax Britain into making concessions to Germany as a bulwark against communism.

An Arbitrary Proposal

The House heard a great deal of impassioned and excellent oratory in denunciation of the Hobbs bill before approving it by a huge majority vote on Friday. That measure provides for the detention of certain classes of undesirable aliens subject to deportation but unable to obtain passports from the countries whence they came.

Only a very small number of persons would be affected by enactment of this bill—probably 50 each year. Moreover, the aliens concerned are those who advocate forcible overthrow of the Government and persons who have been convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude, white slavery or violation of the anti-narcotic laws.

Certainly there are excellent reasons for wishing to be rid of these former criminals and trouble-makers. But there are even more compelling reasons for objecting to the methods of elimination provided in the Hobbs bill. The constitutionality of the suggested procedure is open to question. But even if no such issue arose, forcible and indeterminate detention of persons not being tried for crime would be an imitation of Nazi concentration camps.

It is quite likely that no very serious abuses would result from passage of the bill, since the Secretary of Labor would be given large discretionary powers to release detained aliens for good cause. Nevertheless, legislation of this type has dangerous implications. As Representative Murdock, of Utah, said: "If the criminal may be condemned without a trial today, perhaps tomorrow the innocent man may be condemned." Similarly if we condone the imprisonment of aliens, not as punishment for crime but because we wish to be rid of them, may we not find excuses for detaining undesirable groups of our own citizens?

The troubled state of the world is largely responsible for the presence in this country of aliens who have no homeland to which they can return. It is a situation which prevents the effective enforcement of our deportation laws and creates serious problems for the authorities. However, aliens who break our laws are punishable for the specific offenses they commit. Under the American system of government no man is subject to imprisonment merely because his past record makes him suspect.

Supporters of the Hobbs bill contend that it merely provides for a civil procedure and has nothing to do with crime and punishment. But since detention might continue indefinitely, it cannot be justified as merely incidental to deportation proceedings. This bill has been justly denounced as un-American and undemocratic—a negation of the policies and principles which we associate with liberal political institutions.

Chance For Ickes

There has arrived at the editorial desk a copy of the Singapore Free Press, of April 1, containing a picture of Marian Anderson, who no longer needs any identification for Washingtonians.

What is worthy of comment, however, is not so much the picture as the caption placed under it in the offices of the S. F. P. This reads:

"The colored singer, Marian Anderson, renowned throughout the world, cannot sing in Washington as her license has been barred by the Daughters of the American Revolution. As a protest against this, Mrs. Roosevelt has withdrawn her support from the society."

The Straits Settlements are indubitably a long way from Washington. And it was hard enough, Heaven knows, to penetrate the ins and outs of the great Anderson controversy right here on E street. So one may view the fantastic explanation of the Singapore Free Press more in sorrow than in anger.

The D. A. R., in particular, should feel flattered rather than annoyed over the authority attributed to them in Singapore. Still, after all the society's efforts to differentiate between liberty and license, it is rather cruel to have the S. F. P. attributing licentious powers to them. Somebody should certainly tell the Singaporeans that while bars in Washington have licenses, licenses here are not barred, or not by the D. A. R. at any rate.

For the first time, reading this copy of the Singapore Free Press, we sympathized with Secretary Ickes' comments on a free press. He will, one assumes, be anxious to cite this garble in his next dust-up with the Fourth Estate. In fact it may even move him, like Mrs. Roosevelt, to a protest. That protest, of course, would be directed against the shameless way in which the Marian Anderson episode was throughout misrepresented and exploited.

We are, in hope, cocking an attentive ear towards the Interior Department.

U. S. Ships And Labor

A controversy which may have a vital bearing upon the future relationship between governmental agencies and trade unions has arisen between the Maritime Commission and organized labor serving the West Coast shipping industry. The union leaders are inclined to look upon the Maritime Commission as just another employer of seamen. Officials of that agency reply that it is a part of the United States Government and must be operated as such. The actual manning of the ships in question is thus a minor point on which a major issue is predicated.

The dispute arises out of the Maritime Commission's decision to operate four ships between Seattle and the Orient. Private enterprise has failed to maintain this service because of disturbed conditions in the Far East. The commission believes it should keep the line open, even at a loss to the Government, until it can once more be taken over by a private operator. So it is making arrangements to recruit seamen through Department of Commerce shipping commissioners on the West Coast, as it already does on the East Coast.

The two antagonistic Harrys of the West Coast maritime unions—Mr. Bridges, of the C. I. O., and Mr. Lundeberg, of the A. F. of L.—are united in demanding that the commission draw its crews for the Seattle-Orient line from the union hiring halls. All the shipping companies, and even some governmental agencies operating vessels from Pacific ports, they contend, now use the unions' hiring halls. The union leaders fear that if the Maritime Commission, in operating commercial shipping lines, refuses to patronize this system it will be only a matter of time until private operators will break away from union hiring halls and thus open again the most controversial issue in the field of maritime labor.

It is generally admitted that there were favoritism and other abuses under the shipping commissioner plan of hiring as it operated in the past. Naturally union leaders fear the revival of such conditions if seamen are once more selected from commissioners' lists. But spokesmen for the Maritime Commission contend that, as now revived, this system is free from former abuses, that it does not discriminate against union men, and that it is being operated successfully on the Atlantic Coast without jeopardizing the union hiring halls serving private shipping lines.

Probably the strongest point in the commission's argument is that men chosen to man its ships will be Government employes. While they will not be under civil service, in the common meaning of that term, they will be on the Federal pay roll. For that reason, it is said, the commission could not legally or logically entrust the selection of such employes to a labor union. Since the West Coast hiring halls operate on the principle of rotating men in available jobs, the commission fears that acquiescence in the unions' demands would amount to a relinquishment of a vital Government responsibility.

The basic character of the issue is thus readily apparent. In their relations with labor can governmental agencies accept the principle of the closed shop? That question is infinitely more important than the manning of four Maritime Commission vessels for the Seattle-Orient run. Soon or late a policy more definite than any thus far outlined in this matter may have to be laid down by Congress. In the meantime, a strike to force the commission's hand would be a grave mistake, for it would be, in effect, a challenge to Federal authority.

Encouraging Sign

Trade barriers erected by most of the 48 States came in for vigorous denunciation at a special conference in Chicago a month ago under the auspices of the Council of State Governments. The great majority of Americans who wish to preserve the advantages of free trade within the American market hope that this gathering and the build-up which preceded it, marked a turn of the tide against restrictive legislation of this kind. At least one event tends to confirm that hope.

On the opening date of the conference Secretary Hull wrote to Gov. Bricker in protest against a bill in the Ohio Legislature designed to impose a discriminatory tax on wines imported into Ohio from foreign countries. Mr. Hull was recently informed that even before his letter was written the bill had been withdrawn in favor of a substitute measure proposing a uniform tax on foreign and domestic wine. No doubt the fight against State trade barriers, led by the Council of State Governments, and the recent decision of the Supreme Court, invalidating Florida's discriminatory fees for inspection of foreign cement, were both influential in producing this salutary result.

Primarily, of course, interstate trade barriers are a problem for the States themselves to solve. That is why constructive leadership within the States is so essential. If Governors and legislatures are now as willing to join in this progressive movement as they have been in recent years to follow the bad examples of other State governments, interstate obstructions to commerce can be quickly razed.

Economic Education

The Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, established in 1934, was greatly expanded and put on an entirely new basis at the beginning of 1938. Its funds are now used exclusively to promote American economic education and research. It conducts no educational work on its own account, and does not engage directly in research. Its technique is to make grants in aid of projects submitted for its approval and carried on by existing educational institutions in the United States.

A report covering the foundation's first year shows that it disbursed or promised to advance $367,520 to ten institutions. Nearly one-third of the total was allotted to the Brookings Institution to finance research studies designed to give the public a better understanding of economic problems. The Public Affairs Committee was aided in bringing out in pamphlet form popular digests embodying the results of economic research in many different fields. The University of Chicago received a substantial grant for carrying on weekly broadcasts dealing with economic problems. At Stephens College a National Institute for Consumer Education was established and a number of fellowships were awarded in two other institutions to students training for leadership in economic life.

The foundation is not only supporting routine activities of various educational institutions but is also assisting them to test the possibilities of educational facilities as yet little utilized. These efforts are referred to in the report as new "patterns" within which improved techniques are being developed and new mediums being used to convey information to the people. Such undertakings are frankly experimental and the foundation is not committed to their continuance. By assuming initial risks it enlists the co-operation of institutions that would otherwise hesitate to undertake pioneer work.

Despite the vast amount of material dealing with economic problems, mass economic education has made surprisingly little progress. That is partly because economics is a branch of the social sciences which is extremely difficult to popularize without resort to misleading oversimplification. So the Sloan Foundation may expect some failures and false starts. Nevertheless, it is in a position to perform a real public service by breaking ground for the exploration of new fields of educational activity.

Wild And Woozy West

It is an open secret that things have been none too happy of late with our Hollywood friends. Despite their excursions into classical literature, the shrinkage in box-office figures continued. The quest of a formula that will woo back fickle customers now amounts to a kind of frenzy. Out of this frenzy has come the current epidemic of super-Westerns.

Between these new super-Westerns and the orthodox Westerns is a profoundly important difference, that we hope has not missed your attention. The old Western was a fairy tale, that is to say a kind of pleasant daydream. The new Western is apparently a kind of nightmare.

Thus it is by no means a question of mere plausibility. The old Western, being our American equivalent of the Hausmarchen, was unreal enough, but it had its own rigid conventions from which few if any scenarists were bold enough to depart. There must be, for instance, a girl who is determined to make a success of the ranch, despite the mysterious death of her father and the even more mysterious disappearance of her cattle. There must be the foreman, outwardly devoted to her interests, but secretly in league with the rustlers.

Into this situation must ride the brave stranger (from Texas if the scene be Montana or from Montana if it be Texas) on the beautiful white horse, with his partner who makes up in loyalty for whatever he may lack of intelligence or sobriety. These characters were as standardized as Punch and Judy. Equally standard were the number of incidents required for virtue to triumph and wickedness to be confounded.

The very charm of this fairy world of the old Western was that the expected always happened. It was thus a delightful escape from the unpredictable and unsatisfactory world of everyday. But alas, the producers are now converting this romantic pattern into something even more violent and implausible than reality itself. Under the pressure of competition from two world fairs and one world crisis they feel obliged to make the land of never-never into something even more miraculous than the world of tomorrow and even madder than the world of today.

She has a doll hat which provides no real protection against woodpeckers, but it will probably frighten them away.

"How long should you wait for a girl who is late for an appointment?" someone asks an authority on etiquette. Show us the girl.

"Sometimes I think I might as well etaoin shrdlu cwlffp," she said.—Nevada paper. Tut, tut; she shouldn't even think of doing such a thing.

"If Germany Had Won"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I indorse every word of the letter of "A Constant Reader" in The Post of May 5 entitled "If Germany Had Won." True, Britain and France aren't all they ought to be—but neither are we—or anybody else, and that goes double for some of the rest.

Of course, I doubtless look at the whole matter somewhat differently than those unfortunates terribly disabled—or than those who have an ax to grind! Nevertheless, some of the latter, if not all, would at least talk differently now "If Germany Had Won"—and "don't let anybody tell you differently!"

If we made any blunder, I'm thinking now it was in 1919 and thereafter in not lending more influence against sowing the wind to avoid reaping the whirlwind.

More Pegler

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In reply to the letter by John R. Vosburg in The Post of May 5, condemning Westbrook Pegler, and stating that he is not a big leaguer in writing circles, let me suggest that you give us more of Pegler.

In my opinion Pegler is the best columnist and editorial writer you have. If you published The Post with nothing, but Peg's column every day it would still be a good paper. Let's have a few more writers who are not afraid to say what they think about anyone and anything.

The Check-Off

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial, "The Coal Deadlock," in The Post of May 5 was splendid. Just what, exactly, would be the authority under which the operators would use the check-off, or deduction from pay of the nonunion miners? This procedure possibly is entirely correct where the majority of the union members desire it, but we may assume that the nonunion miners have some reason for staying out of the union and I am sure they could successfully defend themselves against any such arbitary deduction. No doubt others of your readers would be interested in a further discussion of this phase of the matter.

Federal Arts Project

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We, the Washington Chapter of the National Citizens Committee for Support of WPA, are profoundly disturbed by the procedure which has characterized the current investigation into the Federal Arts Projects. The most elementary concepts of fair and impartial hearings seem to have been lost sight of.

Wholly irrelevant material has been presented by various witnesses, who have apparently been encouraged to make broad insinuations and malicious personal attacks. The impression has been created in some quarters that the committee is more interested in fiction than in fact. It is hardly necessary to point out the serious responsibility resting upon a Congressional committee to uphold the principles of dignified, unbiased and objective examination of facts.

It is repugnant to the American sense of justice to allow personal accusations of a serious nature to be made in the absence of the person accused and with no effort to check the veracity, reliability and motivation of the witness or the inherent probability of his story.

We also wish to call attention to the glaring injustice of a questionnaire designed to intimidate project workers and distort facts. Such a questionnaire more nearly approximates an inquisition and violates basic American rights by imposing political tests for public employment.

No investigation can properly be called complete unless it duly evaluates the positive achievements and the cultural contributions of the projects. It is difficult to see how the committee can make any recommendations for policy or appropriations except by a thorough-going analysis of these positive and constructive aspects of the program.

It is the hope of all fair-minded citizens that the committee will give due consideration to the two issues involved:

(1) The preservation of highest standards of fair and judicious investigative procedure and the safeguarding of basic civil rights.

(2) The presentation of a complete and well-balanced picture of the whole arts program.

MARIE COLEMAN,
Washington Secretary.

Washington, May 5.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I enjoy reading your esteemed paper, but your editorial "WPA and the Arts" seemed to me a bit misleading. I will confine my remarks to the Federal Writers Projects, as I have followed its activities very closely for a long time.

To date this Writers Project has turned out about 309 books, booklets and guides of various types. Before these were launched, there was little or nothing worthy of the name of "guide book," which would furnish comprehensive, authoritative and dignified information on the various States and large cities of the Union.

These have borne the imprint of well-known publishers, such as Houghton-Mifflin, Viking Press and the Government Printing Office. As for demand, editions of 8,000 and 10,000 are customary, and book stores do a brisk trade in these volumes. Many collectors of first editions specialize in productions of the Federal Writers Project, and many first editions which are now exhausted command a premium in the book market.

The Federal Writers Project has employed on its staff winners of Guggenheim fellowships and many others of recognized talent. The books of the project are all sponsored by historic or civic associations and the talent and work of writing them alone are the contribution of the Federal Writers Project.

C. A. LANSON.

Washington, May 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Like any reader of The Post who expects a reputable newspaper to adhere to the American idea of fair play, I was shocked at the stand it took in the editorial of May 3 entitled "WPA and the Arts." The insinuations and statements it makes against the white-collar projects of the WPA convince me that you have fallen in line with the witch-hunting tactics of the House Appropriations Committee now conducting hearings.

Like the committee at Monday's hearings, you have chosen to accept the statements of disgruntled employes as conclusive evidence, without hearing the other side of the issue discussed.

It might interest you to know that your own literary critics have praised these books and that Lewis Mumford has called the project's American Guide Series "the most patriotic contribution made in our generation."

Whose Gold

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: According to the news commentators, the President wants very much to "do something" with this country's vast and growing gold supply. The commentators say that experts are studying what can be done to make gold good for something besides hiding and that thus far all they can think of is a plan for lending gold back to nations that sent it over here.

The gold which the Treasury holds is the property of private citizens. This is evidenced by the fact that against the gold holdings of the Treasury are now outstanding over ten billion dollars of various forms of gold certificates held by banks and the Federal Reserve System.

You will recall that shipments of gold to Europe jumped a good many million dollars the last few days before the issuance of the Presidential order sequestrating gold in 1933.

Since the feeling of panic and lack of confidence of the American citizens which existed in 1933 has now been dissolved and since the holding of such an enormous quantity of gold in one set of hands is becoming such a problem, would not the logical solution be to put the gold hoard of the U. S. Government back into circulation in the hands of private citizens? Very few of the wealthy private citizens would surely wish to risk shipments of gold to Europe at this time. For the balance of the American citizens there would be just enough inclination to put gold away into personal safekeeping that the temptation of the Government to make shipments to other nations on unfavorable terms (in exchange for silver or promise to pay) would be discouraged.

A POST SUBSCRIBER.

Social Welfare

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Social welfare is organized in Poland in many varied forms. It includes homes for infants and children (in 1934—882 homes with 42,484 inmates); maternal aid and children welfare stations (in 1935—383); homes for old people, for the disabled, mentally weak, for the sick, etc. (in 1934—1,543 homes with 26,880 inmates). These establishments are maintained by the local self-government and social service institutions, under the control of the ministry of social welfare and its agencies.

Besides these establishments there exists a system of social protection of children consisting in extra feeding, clothing, school help, and summer colonies. In 1934 there were 1,428 boarding summer colonies and 553 day colonies, for a total of 77,377 children.

For the adult population there exist public homes, garden allotments, assistance for the victims of disasters, as fires, floods, etc., houses for refugees and pensions for war invalids. Begging and vagrancy are stopped by placing beggars and vagrants into special homes and workhouses.

The activities of social welfare are managed by local government agencies, and only in exceptional cases by the state. Numerous social service organizations are helping the local and state authorities in this work.

The main budgetary disbursements of the ministry of social welfare (1934-35) total 33,489,000 zlotye. The budgetary expenditure of local government unions on social welfare in 1935-36 was, according to provisional figures, 45,366,000 zlotye, thus the total disbursement on social welfare amounts to approximately 78,000,000 zlotye per annum.

'By The Sword'

THERE ARE duels and there are duels, Freyling said, squinting carefully down the neck of the beer bottle he had just opened. I speak of them, he said, from personal knowledge, for in the one sort I was a witness and in the other, I will have you know, I was an active participant.

Both were at Erlangen, at the beginning of the century, he continued. I was young and foolish and my capacity for beer was such that my father had no cause for shame when I was inducted into Corps Germania, as an honorary member.

In the first few months, however, I precipitated what was close to an international incident when I thought only to have made a gracious remark. As an American, I observed to my fraternity brothers that I thought dueling was a fine sport. The error of my thinking was quickly and rather icily made clear to me. Dueling, I was advised, was not a sport. It was an indispensable training for life. It was "facing the sword."

The serious business of dueling which I witnessed was the aftermath of a particularly festive party which Germania at Erlangen gave for a visiting Verbindung from Bavaria. One of our lads sat at the table next to a visitor. Both were from the same town. Both had consumed more champagne than was good for them. The visitor made a remark about the guest's sister.

The party broke up like a shot. An hour later two members of the visiting corps appeared at our door. With utmost formality and as if there had never been any party a few minutes before, they set about arranging terms. Our boy wanted pistols.

Referees from a third neutral Verbindung were called in. They barred pistols, but in consideration of the offense's gravity permitted sabers, without guards or protection.

The duel was fought a week or so later, near the Austrian border of Saxony—there was a border in those days—so that if a fatality occurred the victor could escape the German police, who were officially obliged to frown on the practice.

Both men were stripped to the waist. They fought for 10 minutes without drawing a drop of blood—a very rare spectacle, but both were excellent swordsmen. Suddenly our man, the offended party, caught the other in the middle of the forehead, sliced down between the eyes, over the nose, down the mouth, chin and chest. We whipped the victor into a coach-and-four and rode hell for leather into Austria.

Next day, happily, a phone call from Dresden indicated that the vanquished dueler was walking the streets, proud as a peacock, and drinking quantities of beer to insure that the wound would heal badly, leaving a thick and beauteously obvious welt.

My own duel, I am pleased to say, added Freyling, was a bird of a different color. Germania members fought the usual, formal, impersonal interfraternity duels twice a week. These—I find it difficult to resist the term—were sporting affairs. They were fought either at our own country pavillion or at a similar lodge of whatever corps we were engaging.

The two men, guarded over the throat and heart with heavy felt and the eyes protected with steel-mesh goggles, would have at each other, three blows at a time, for a given number of what might be called innings. The first cut had to be delivered in a certain position, with a certain wrist movement. The second slice was from a different position, and so the third. The crime was not being cut, it was flinching.

I never fought in such affairs, being only an honorary member. But before I was to leave Erlangen my corps brothers decided that I must face the sword.

One afternoon, therefore, in the village inn where we took our 5 o'clock beer, I marched to the table of a rival fraternity, and, selecting a young fellow who had the reputation of being the most notoriously clumsy swordsman on the campus, I informed him that no gentleman would be seen dead in the nauseous, mustard-colored overcoat he wore. As a matter of fact, it was a rather handsome ulster.

Resignedly—it had happened to him so often before, poor lad—the fellow challenged.

The duel was fought in a couple of days. I took one slight precaution. I got, as my second, the most dangerous swordsman at Erlangen. Every time my opponent laid down a blow which appeared beyond my prowess to parry, my second took it on his sword, with the cry of "foul." In such circumstances, it is the obligation of the other man's second to challenge the validity of the judgment, if he thinks there is some doubt. Obviously, the blows were not foul. But for the other lad's second to deny it would have meant a seconds' duel, on the spot. The calls of foul, thanks to my second's reputation, went unchallenged.

I added a cut or so to the already plentifully marked cheek of my opponent, and satisfied the amenities by wetting my calling card in his blood. He pinked me, too. Everyone was delighted, especially my father.

Freyling put down his glass and drew the skin tight on the left side of his chin. There was a tiny white scar that I had never noticed before.

Fair Enough

Southern Poverty

I HAVE a feeling that I ought to be making foreign policy these days instead of just doing-around in small domestic affairs, but if I don't use up this batch of batter now it will mildew and get thrown out.

Moreover, the condition that meets the eye in certain areas behind the pleasure coast of Florida and in southern Georgia and Alabama is such that any American who has ever talked down to Europeans about the degradation of their unwashed acorn-eaters is bound to regret that he raised the subject. It would be interesting, if unpleasant, to hear what an Italian, a Spaniard, a Russian or even a scabby Albanian goat herder would have to say about the vaunted American standard of living after observing the foul poverty of so many Americans, white and black, and the wretched, swaybacked, windowless cabins in which they live and beget and dissolve.

Degraded Poverty Near High Luxury

THERE ARE shacks inhabited by Americans in small, veiled clearings in the jungle on the edges of Lake Okeechobee, Florida—that fabulously rich and fertile land—in which an Albanian leper would not keep his dog, or even his wife, and much of life on the higher lands a little to the north is better only in the sense that one may prefer one wasting disease to another.

It is no secret that in most large cities the distance between luxury and the most degraded poverty is only 20 cents by taxi, but here, at least, the public conscience has always tried to do something, though the net result may be only social and economic puttering. But it was only recently that the country discovered the plight of the rural slum-dweller, whom Mr. Roosevelt, with his knack for trademarks and, perhaps, for exaggeration, called one-third of the nation, and it may be observed that a guilty conscience has attempted to mock it off with a new vein of humor known as hillbilly stuff. They may not foot up to one-third of the nation, even when added to the mill town, metropolitan and backwoods, poor of other sections, but there are so many of them that they deeply wound the smug and fatuous pride of anyone who has been so reckless and ignorant as to reflect, as I have, that, after all, the poorest Americans live better than the average clods in certain foreign lands.

Prison Sentence Welcomed by Many

THE TRUTH is that they don't, and that even if they did possess some hairline advantage over the side-hill dodgers of some neglected Balkan hollow their condition would still be a disgrace to a country as rich as this one and as proud of its standards.

It is stunning to realize, after years of regarding such habitations as picturesque and even slightly funny, that the homes of so many American families are no better than the tin shanties which housed the bums on city dumps in the early days of the long panic, with only wooden shutters to keep the weather out, some of them without any doors at all, patched with strips of old cans and fragments of board.

Beaten down until now, they haven't the initiative or energy to raise the kinds of food which they need or the skill or gumption to repair the leaks in their wretched hovels, thousands of members of Mr. Roosevelt's third drag on in such a state of life that a sentence to the Florida State Prison, at Raiford, may be regarded not as a misfortune but as a break of luck. For the prison is a beautiful, clean world of security, comfort and plenty by comparison with the existence which they know outside.

Jail Surroundings A Luxury to Some

THEN, TOO, prison terms are short in Florida, even for murder, so that a man or woman who grows restless inside and begins to long for freedom is soon returned to squalor and the company of objects that creep and crawl and bite. The good prisoners are not farmed out under contract to the highway department to live in detached camps.

Those who behave are permitted to remain in surroundings which, to many, are luxurious. This may account for the fact that the crime rate and the prison population are rising. A term of from one to three years for a petty job of breaking and entering has the quality of an appointment to West Point or a scolarship at a pleasant college.

MEET "Miss Bax of the Embassy" (Houghton, $3). Away back in 1902 a shy English girl, 5 feet 1 inch tall and not yet 20 years old, she first sat behind a typewriter in the United States chancellery in London. She stayed 12 years; when she left, Ambassador Walter Hines Page said that "anybody else might go or might die and not be long missed, but if she were to go the Embassy would be out of gear." Then she waited another quarter century to write this friendly, gossipy, curiously alive picture of our London Embassy in peaceful prewar years.

Her function had been chiefly to buy stamps and to make tea for the office staff in her first job, at the House of Lords. There was more work in the American Embassy, despite the legend "Hours 11 to 3" posted on the board outside. But the staff left too early for tea.

Some of the young men needed watching. Not William Phillips (now Ambassador to Italy), to be sure; he had joined the Embassy staff with so fresh and girlish a complexion and so pronounced a Boston accent that he was promptly christened "the Puritan maiden," but he seemed to have been born with an instinct for punctilio. And not Hugh Gibson, another career diplomat with a future who was in London briefly in 1909. But Craig Wadsworth, who brought more suits to London than there were days in the month, required attention; he had a constant desire to wear silk knee breeches when the American code forbade them.

CLOTHES REGULATIONS were a constant trial. In the early days of this Republic its Ministers abroad dressed gaudily and satisfyingly. An unimaginative Congress, back in 1867, forbade uniforms and costumes not authorized by Congress, which stunted the imaginations of whole generations of diplomats. The Europeans thought that the black-clad Americans looked like "crows among the birds of paradise"; indeed, in 1899 the Russian government refused to admit an Ambassador in such drab costume. And perhaps it was this drabness which placed Theodore Roosevelt, special ambassador at the funeral of King Edward VII, in a carriage behind scores of mounted monarchs and royal relatives.

That slight upon America gave rise to long and painful diplomatic correspondence; but Whitelaw Reid, the regular Ambassador at the time, had had something to do with it. He had restrained the impetuous Theodore, who wanted to wear a Rough Rider costume he had with him in London, and he shared the feeling of his military attache, who thought that Mr. Roosevelt, in a silk hat and frock coat, on a fiery steed, might not have added to the glory of the Stars and Stripes.

It was another of Ambassador Reid's secretaries, however—Mr. De Lancey Jay—who had a sartorial triumph which, if vicarious, was unique in Embassy annals. Fridtiof Nansen, first Minister from the new Kingdom of Norway, came to the American Embassy for advice upon his uniform. Mr. Jay explained to Nansen that the English did not like the somber American diplomatic dress, and suggested that he evolve something original. "Why not," he said, "instead of an ordinary black suit have one of very dark blue, that lovely midnight blue . . . and hy not, instead of a black waistcoat and white tie, reverse it and wear a white waistcoat and black tie? And gold buttons on the waistcoat." Mr. Nansen adopted the suggestion—for a time.

It is, perhaps, understandable that Miss Bax's English mother, after attending a few of the Embassy's Fourth of July functions, decided that Americans were "unpredictable," and gave them up.

JOSEPH H. CHOATE, Miss Bax's first Ambassador, was informal and easy-going. He even permitted his English secretary to chop up the over-long sentences he dictated. Mr. Choate used to enjoy a nap at his desk after lunch. Sometimes, as he slept, his foot would rest more and more heavily upon a buzzer on the floor. The staff would stand the noise as long as possible, then send in a quiet representative to move the great man's foot without waking him up. Once he wakened, and was startled by the figure kneeling at his feet. "What is this," he asked irritably, "murder or worship?"

The great days of the Embassy were in the Whitelaw Reid regime. Mr. Reid entertained magnificently even when such dangerous "hot potatoes" as W. J. Bryan were his guests. He "was a most appropriate man to be sent to England as Ambassador," says Miss Bax, "for he was of the grand seigneur type, quiet, reserved, dignified, a type understood and much liked in England, and therefore sure to be successful." After Mr. Reid, Ambassador Page seemed "pleasant and kindly . . . rather countrified."

But by that time she was herself more than half an American. At the end of 1914 she crossed the ocean to stay, and here she became an American citizen. A rare combination of an English sense of form with a taste for Yankee "unpredictability" gives spice and dignity to her account of the folderol days when diplomacy was still an adventure in friendship.

Sir Ronald Accepts McDowell Apology For 'Flunkey' Slur

Sir Ronald Lindsay, British Ambassador, yesterday declared members of the empire's government are used to "opprobrious epithets" in accepting the apology of Representative McDowell (Republican), of Pennsylvania, for an open letter to the King and Queen of England in the Wilkinsburg Gazette last week.

The Gazette, owned by McDowell, but operated in his absence by Harry Roberts, 24, had invited their majesties to come to Wilkinsburg "just as you are," but urged them to leave "some of their flunkies behind."

In answer to McDowell's letter declaring himself "shocked and distressed," Sir Ronald said even with his "slight acquaintance" with the King and Queen he could understand why Wilkinsburg favored the royal visit. British government employes are used to "more opprobrious epithets" than "flunkies," he asserted.

The Mead Bill

IT BEGINS to look as if this Congress, with the backing of the Administration, would concoct at least one stimulant to business enterprise. This is the provision of more adequate credit facilities for small and medium-sized business concerns.

For years small businessmen have been complaining that they cannot get credit for working capital and expansion. Their complaints have not gone unheeded. Access to credit has been provided through the RFC, the Federal Reserve Banks, and liberalization of the banking laws. But the resultant loans have been small in total volume, and the complaints from businessmen have continued.

Possibly the bankers and the RFC have been too timid or too exacting. Possibly many businessmen have felt that they could not go to the RFC without labeling themselves as second or third-rate risks. Possibly most of the small businessmen who complain of inability to obtain loans are not good risks. Possibly what they really need is more customers, or, at most, "risk capital," not credit which a soundly managed lending agency can be expected to provide.

An Unmet Need For Small Loans

HOWEVER, where there are so many complaints there must be an unmet need. Although less was heard about it in the balmy "twenties, our credit system makes scanty provision for the small and medium-sized business enterprise which wants to borrow up to $1,000,000 for a period running up to ten years. Wall Street and the other big financial markets pay little attention to the small enterprise. Ordinarily the small businessman has relied on his own resources and those of a few friends in his own community. Ordinarily he cannot market his own securities publicly except at exorbitant cost.

More than a year ago William O. Douglas, then chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, proposed that a series of intermediate credit banks be established to meet the need of businessmen who want to borrow, say up to $1,000,000 for a period running up to ten years. This particular plan was frowned upon in the Federal Reserve Board, which saw no reason for setting up a series of special banks to do what it thought the existing banking system ought to do.

Various other schemes have been proposed. But lately opinion within the Administration has been moving toward the plan presented in a bill introduced by Senator Mead of New York.

'Little Man' Borrows With U. S. Insurance

THE MEAD BILL applies the insurance principle, which seems to be working well in the financing of home-building under the Federal Housing Administration, to intermediate credits to small and medium-sized business enterprises.

Under the plan now proposed, a businessman wanting credit in an amount up to $1,000,000 for a period up to ten years would go to his bank or trust company. The bank or trust company would assume 10 per cent of the risk—enough to insure that the loan would not be made improvidently. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation would insure the remaining 90 per cent of the loan, at a charge of not more than 1 per cent annually on the original amount of the loan. The insured loan would be eligible for discount or rediscount by a Federal Reserve Bank. The Federal Reserve Banks would also be authorized to sell these insured notes to private investors.

Loans made in this way would bear a maximum interest rate of 4 per cent, plus a service charge of not more than 1 per cent, plus the insurance premium of not more than 1 per cent. They would be secured by mortgages having a value of at least 125 per cent of the principal of the loan.

Banker Assured Of High Liquidity

THIS SCHEME is intended to promote lending for business purposes at reasonable rates by limiting the banker's risk of loss, and, at the same time, to assure to the banker a high degree of liquidity to meet his deposit obligations.

It can be argued that nobody knows what the losses would be under such a system, so that the insurance premiums running up to 1 per cent annually might prove to be inadequate. The answer is that the Government can afford to take some degree of risk in order to stimulate business enterprise.

It can be argued that this system will not provide "risk" capital—equity capital—which may be the real need of small and medium-sized business. That is true. It is difficult to see how the banking system, with proper regard for its depositors, can be expected to put capital into highly risky ventures.

What this plan offers to small and medium-sized enterprises is the kind of capital which larger corporations obtain by issuing bonds or preferred stock. Maybe there isn't a large unmet need for that kind of capital. At least, it would be worth while to find out whether or not there is. If there is, this plan should go a long way toward meeting it, thus stimulating business activity and increasing employment.

*The Revolution of Nihilism

AS THE DISPOSITION of Danzig is being discussed a book has come at last to my hands for which I have been waiting for some time. It has not yet been translated into English and I hope it will be gotten out at once.

Its author was formerly president of the Danzig senate. He is a German landowner. He is not a Jew. He is not a Communist. He is a German patriot. He does not believe in the Treaty of Versailles or in the postwar system represented in the League of Nations and Franco-British hegemony. He is a German nationalist who wants to see Germany become again a great country.

He was once a National Socialist, because he believed that national socialism would restore order in Germany, and right injustice.

Civilization Warned Of Crisis

BUT HE HAS NOT WRITTEN a brief to prove that Danzig should be given to Germany. He is not interested in any such minor matter. He has written to warn the world, to warn the the whole of Western civilization, that it faces the greatest crisis in its history; that National Socialism is not a movement to obtain justice for Germany inside the framework of Western civilization; that it is not a movement representing German nationalism; that it is not a movement which will restore order and unity to Western civilization; that it is not a movement which will be a bulwark against bolshevism; that it is not even the "totalitarian state"—nor a state at all, but it is that apocalyptic thing "the Total Revolution;" the permanent revolution; dynamism, in which movement exists for the sake of movement.

He warns that it cannot come to rest, that it cannot construct and that it cannot be appeased.

He calls it the revolution of nihilism. And that is the title of the most important book on national socialism which has been published since Heiden's History. The author is Hermann Rauschning. You will find the book on the desks of such British Foreign Office officials, such American State Department officials, such French publicists as can read German. It has had no popular reading but it has had an enormous political influence.

Finds It Leads To Nihilism

FOR HERMANN RAUSCHNING has had to make a choice; whether openly to desert the regime which claims to be the legitimate government and purest expression of Germany; whether to become, in other words, that hardest thing for a German to endure being called—a renegade; whether to do this in a time of international crisis; whether to announce that, above being German, he is a European—and, as a German, a preserver of Western civilization; or whether to say, "My country right or wrong," and keep still.

And he has decided to speak.

Herman Rauschning was in the National Socialist movement; like all Germans he wished to see Danzig restored to the Reich.

He became president of the Danzig Senate. Then he was ordered by the party to complete the total Nazification of Danzig, to begin the wholesale ruin of the Catholics and Jews, and when he saw what faced him—namely, the extermination of every principle which he believed that Germany shared with the rest of Western civilization and the adoption of the tactics of nihilistic revolution, he resigned, crying to himself, "I have been lied to and betrayed!"

HE KEPT HIS PEACE for a long time. Now, in self-imposed exile, he has spoken to tell the world that it is being lied to and betrayed—that "every attempt to maintain even superficially the fiction of an evolution toward a legal condition of affairs must fail, because it takes no account of the essential tendency of the dynamic revolution, the tendency which is the opposite pole of any legal social order, and which is the progressive dissolution of all historical values into total nihilism."

"The attempt of these times," he says, "is to come to terms even with the unbearable out of fear that what is coming will be even worse. But before the question What will change an unbearable condition to a better, or perhaps a worse one, stands the decisive question: What inevitably must become of a certain development if it is simply left alone to its own tendencies?"

And he comes to the dismaying conclusion that what must come of the nihilism of the German revolution is chaos and the most appalling collapse.

"What is this revolution?" he asks. "A breaking loose of the nation, which shows the sharpest signs of a radical all-inclusive revolution; outwardly discipline and order, behind them the destruction of all the elements of order in the nation; violent outer feats of work which cannot cover the plunder and the destruction of material, intellectual and spiritual values produced through generations; an illimitable activity which cannot any longer conceal its inner apathy.

Urged Destruction Of Everything

"WHAT IS THIS Third Reich in reality—the beginning of a new order or disorder? National renaissance out of the historical powers in the nation, or progressive permanent revolution, a compromise nihilism, with which dictatorship of violence pulls itself in power?" And heanswers that it is the latter.

It is interesting that he uses the word "Shigalovism" to describe the progressive Nazi revolution. The word was once used by this column to describe both the German and the Russian revolution, in its latter-day phase.

Shigalov was the nihilist revolutionary in Dostoevsky's "The Possessed," who fiendishly advocated the total destruction of every intellectual and spiritual value of civilization, as the means of paving the way for a new order of things, which would come about when ruin had been complete.

But Rauschning is not writing polemic. This is a carefully documented book. In it he describes both the inner nature of the Nazi "world philosophy," which, he reveals, is not a philosophy at all, but a surrogate revolution, based on slogan and mass hypnosis, covering a coldly logical tactic; he analyzes the tactic itself, which is the revolution; he reveals its goal, which is nothing less than the conquest of the whole world by this tactic; and he reveals the form of organization of the revolution-carrier, the party and the leader.

Myth Built Up Carefully

HE DOES NOT THINK that the death of Hitler will dissolve this movement. On the contrary, he reveals that the Fuehrer dead may prove to be more potent than the Fuehrer living.

For already the myth is being carefully built up. Hitler is to be the Messiah of organic evolution—the anti-Christ of the will to power, which is not a will to national power, but a will to power per se, the liberation of the lustfully destructive from any inhibitions whatsoever.

There is a horrible fascination in his description of the formation of the Nazi elite.

He leaves no one in the illusion that the Nazi revolution is, in any sense of the word, bourgeois. It is a mass movement, held together by mesmeric slogans, the class struggle translated into terms of "class nations," the appeal being consistently directed to the elements of the population who are without standards—the lowest, most ignorant and most unskilled.

The masses, consoled with social security and constantly whipped into hysterical excitement, are to be led forever and forever by the new "elite."

'Elite' Chosen Biologically

THE "ELITE" are biologically selected. They are picked from amongst the strongest bodies, the youth with the best-functioning glands, who are then consistently trained to be free of any inhibitions imposed by such dead and gone historical values as derive from Christianity, or intellectual tradition, and trained to take consummate joy in the liberation of their most primitive instincts.

These instincts, however, are organized, directed, canalized at a word from the top—so that at any moment the social order may see the "spontaneous" pogrom, which is the more horrible in that it is really, to a degree, spontaneous, once the corrupting process has been achieved by Nazi education!

The education of the Nazi elite, it turns out, is the education of super-racketeers and gangsters from among the biologically superior. The concept of "noblesse oblige" is transformed into its polar opposite: into the concept that out of the biologically potentially noble will come a leadership of super-bandits, who will plunder the world; to whom organized murder, terror, espionage, robbery, treachery, the use of the lie, rape—which is flourishing in present-day Germany—will seem the natural, even the organic way of life.

And, indeed it is, if the inhibitions imposed upon men by centuries of tradition are once completely released.

History Offers Analogies

THERE IS NOTHING in this book concerning the nature of the Nazi revolution which is new to this column, except an increased documentation. But the human mind, if it is somewhat civilized, doubts repeatedly the evidence of its own experience and its own knowledge.

It is extremely difficult to imagine something that one has not seen before. Yet what is urgently needed is just such capacity for imagination and realization.

History furnishes some interesting analogies. The Ottoman Empire had a system of recruiting Christian Janissaries which somewhat corresponded to the formation of the Nazi elite. Christian boys were selected for the biological strength—whether that strength manifested itself in superior cunning, ruthlessness or physical prowess—and they were then carefully trained for the expansion and preservation of the Ottoman rule by the consistent development of anti-Christian tendencies.

And the Ottoman Empire held a large part of Europe and lasted from its rise to its final decline for nearly a thousand years.

Disease Has Epidemic Nature

IF RAUSCHNING'S ANALYSIS of Nazism is correct, then it is apparent that it cannot be dealt with at all in the traditional procedures of diplomacy or from the aspect of power politics—by compromise, concession or adjustment. It cannot, itself, make such compromises or adjustments. It cannot take any step which would make it a co-operative part of any conceivable European or world system under any kind of adjustment whatsoever. For to do so would be to destroy itself. And it is doubtful whether war is the answer.

Rather, it is like a disease of an epidemic nature. The treatment of it must be isolation. But not isolation from it—for that is like allowing the malarial mosquito to flourish until it invades our own soil. Isolationism should mean isolation of it. Isolation of it from every part of Western civilization, and from Russia, in conjunction with whom, as Rauschning rightly fears, it would create the apocalypse of civilization.

Somoza Plans To Hear House Debate Navy

Hull Gives Luncheon To Nicaraguan President at Carlton

Rested after a relatively quiet Washington Sunday, Nicaraguan President Somoza will hear House debate today on the Naval Appropriation bill.

Yesterday President and Senora de Somoza were entertained at a Carlton Hotel luncheon by Secretary of State Hull.

In the afternoon President Somoza received several Washington friends and was dined at the Nicaraguan Legation in the evening. Tomorrow he will inspect the University of Maryland, where President H. C. Byrd will be host at a luncheon. Later he will visit the Agriculture Experimntal Farm at Beltsville.

At the university, President Somoza will attend a conference in Dr. Byrd's office on agricultural relationship to the economic life of the State. The visitor will review the R. O. T. C. regiment at the annual competitive drill.

Protocol experts mulled over details of the military welcome given to Somoza on his arrival Friday and decided the ceremony needed a "shot in the arm" when the King and Queen of England visit Washington in June.

Army and State Department officials may decide that more bands and less delay are called for. The Diplomatic Corps was kept waiting at the White House too long before the Presidential party appeared and the long haul to the White House suffered from lack of music, it was said.

George T. Summerlin, State Department chief of protocol, will discuss the reception with President Roosevelt in the next few days.

Friends and associates of Elwood Street, retiring Director of Public Welfare, will pay tribute to him for his ten years of service to Washington at a reception and dinner at 6:45 p. m. Wednesday at Barker Hall, Young Women's Christian Association, Seventeenth and K streets northwest.

Besides Father Shehan, speakers will include Commissioner Hazen, Frederick W. McReynolds, Newbold Noyes, Coleman Jennings, Mrs. Henry S. Bernton, and Campbell Johnson.

But such private competition to Government enterprise is going to have to be curbed in future, the restaurant operators warned, or they can't make ends meet.

WHIRLING DERVISH DRINKS: Shar-Zad provides many drinks matching its Arabian Nights atmosphere. You can have Omar Khayyam, Bagdad and Arabian coffee cocktails, arrack old-fashioneds, and Kismet and Dervish punches. Note—The Biltmore Boys will conclude their season at Shar-Zad on next Saturday evening. Don't come around alleging we didn't tell you.

STAR SONGAGE: Arthur Todd singing "Adios, Muchacha" in the King Cole Room. A fine voice and artful singing. Arthur lately turned down an offer to go to the Rockefeller Rainbow Room in order to remain in Washington.

"Tiny" Meeker of the Cafe Caprice singing "Cafe Caprice," a witty ditty to the tune of "Ilse of Capri."

That cuh-razy ballad, "Hooray for Spinach!" especially when barytone Ted Alexander (Paul Kain's Metronome Room band) has fun with it.

JIMMY, THE PRODIGY. Jimmy Santmyer, whose orchestra is now attracting folks to Pall Mall, was a shild prodigy. He played the piano when he was 5 years old and, at 12, played a concert at the National Theater.

LOTUS HOLDOVER: All of Earl Lindsay's Revue is to be held over this week. It's a splendid show, with highly attractive parade numbers and also graced by the handsome dancing of Federico and Jeanette.

RUMBA STEPPERS: For some of the smartest rumba dancing you'll ever see off a theater stage, just visit the Lounge Riviera. The youthful society crowd that favors the Riviera dance the tango and rumba like professionals. Especially to Pete Macias' favorite "Adios."

But down at Madrillon the other evening we saw the finest pair of rumba dancers hereabouts—youthful Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bon Cure. Everyone in the place was watching them, and delightedly.

Good News for SINUS Sufferers and Hay Fever Victims

It has been found that a shortage of certain vitamins—particularly Vitamin A—make some people suffer more severely from Sinus Infections and Hay Fever. Vitamin A helps guard the mucous membranes—particularly of the eyes, ears, nose and throat.

Hundreds of sinus and hay fever sufferers right here in Washington are building up their resistance and improving their health by taking RITAMINE Capsules, the modern way to vitamineralize. Each day you take two tiny RITAMINE Capsules and you get all 6 recognized Vitamins together with 10 important minerals. If you need more vitamins and minerals, RITAMINE is an ideal easy way to get them. Costs only 9c a day.

Wadsteds Hold Brilliant Reception For Danish Prince and Princess

Society Wears Formal Attire Despite Warm Weather at Fete for Frederik and Ingrid; Bostroms Also Honor Royal Pair at Dinner

By Dudley Harmon

Society's standard equipment for paying respects to royalty—top hats, striped trousers, elbow length kid gloves, trailing chiffon dresses, and curtsies—were all in evidence at the reception held yesterday afternoon in honor of Crown Prince Frederik and Crown Princess Ingrid of Denmark by the popular Danish Minister and Mme. Wadsted. The masculine contingent rose above the heat wave and donned their heavy morning coats, and many of the women chose to curtsy, all the way from a dancing school dip to a bend just a few inches above the floor.

Four strapping policemen and a sidewalk gallery of small children and adults were ranged expectantly outside the legation on Belmont street. Patiently gawking at the dignitaries who alighted from gleaming limousines, the gallery was finally rewarded with a sight of the royal couple when they left to dress for the dinner given in their honor by the Swedish Minister and Mme. Bostrom.

If the urchins had been allowed to step inside, they would have seen: Just inside the drawing room at the right of the hall the receiving line of four: the hosts and the guests of honor . . . Crown Princess Ingrid really looking like a princess in a floor-length, pearl gray silk dress with a close fitting jacket trimmed down the front with buttons, and a brimmed hat to match, trimmed with pale pink ostrich feathers . . . The Prince, who is 6 feet 5 inches tall, admitted that royal tours are a bit tiring, but saying that the only time he really felt discouraged was when a reporter laboring under a slight misapprehension as to the country he represented, asked him at Saturday's press conference about the divorce laws of Norway . . . Mme. Wadsted, charming and friendly, in a soft yellow, floor-length frock, trimmed with brilliants at the waist and topped off with a necklace and earrings of pearls . . . The four taking half a minute out in the middle of the afternoon for glasses of orange juice thoughtfully ordered for them by Legation Counselor Wilhelm Eickhoff.

Guests Wander Onto Terrace

A milling crowd of officials and residents spilling out onto the broad veranda and down the stone steps onto the terraced lawn, where small tables had been set up . . . Mme. Bostrom and Mme. Wennerberg of the Swedish legation, both in trailing dresses (Princess Ingrid is connected with the Swedish royal family) . . . Mrs. Cordell Hull, fresh from her luncheon in honor of the President of Nicaragua, wearing a pale blue dress with a navy blue hat on which perched a chartreuse bird . . . The British Ambassador and Lady Lindsay with their secretary, Miss Irene Boyle, who made a conservative bow . . . Justice Felix Frankfurter in earnest conversation with Emil Hurja . . . Mrs. Frankfurther nearby in a luggage tan print and matching straw hat . . . the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Harold Ickes, arriving early and leaving shortly after paying their respects.

The Cabinet's leading partygoer, Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, was of course on hand, and so was pretty Mrs. Harold H. Woodring, in a fuchsia-colored frock with a white frill at the neck and a hat to match . . . Senator and Mrs. Warren Austin, Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, Senator and Mrs. William King, and Senator and Mrs. Charles McNary added dignity to the occasion.

The urchins would have admired Mme. Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador, who wore a navy blue redingote over her blue and white print frock, and a navy blue hat with trailing veiling . . . George T. Summerlin's patience when people brought up before the State Department's Chief of Protocol the inevitable subject of the curtsies . . . Mrs. George T. Summerlin's new navy blue taffeta dress with a white lace petticoat . . . Mrs. Boerge Rhode's smart outfit (she was formerly Minister to Denmark and came down for the dinner on Saturday evening at the legation.) "What would they have done if it had rained?" everybody was asking. If it had not been for the verandas and the terraces, there surely would have been a risk of suffocation. The dining room was crowded with guests who admired the array of cakes and sandwiches and the silver bowl of crimson roses in the center of the table.

Congress, State Department Well Represented

Charles Spruks, ceremonial officer of the State Department, was accompanied by Mrs. Spruks, and looked none the worse for wear after weeks of planning for royal visits. The South African Minister and Mrs. Ralph William Close, the former Austrian Minister and Mrs. Ralph William Close, the former Austrian Minister and Mme. Prochnik, the Czecho-Slovak envoy and Mme. Hurban, and the Panamanian Minister and Senora de Boyd were other guests.

Dr. Hans Thomsen, Charge d'Affaires of the German Embassy, was in conversation with Victor Mallet, of the British Embassy, and several other men . . . Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris talked on the lawn with Mme. Oumansky, wife of the Soviet Charge d'Affaires . . . Kurt Hetzel told friends about the concert tomorrow of the Washington Civic Orchestra, which he conducts.

Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock, with Miss Fontaine Fahnestock, sat at a table with Countess van Rechteren-Limpurg, who wore a navy blue and white checked jacket dress and hat trimmed in red; Miss Rebecca Wellington and Mrs. Harold Hinton, up and about again after an illness. Miss Marian Trumbull wedged her way through the crowd, pausing to chat with Clarence Hewes . . . Mrs. James M. Helm and Mrs. Nathan Wyeth also were noted.

Representative Sol Bloom was accompanied by Mrs. Bloom and Miss Vera Bloom . . . The Netherlands Minister was with Mme. Loudon, who looked cool and charming in a black chiffon frock with a flower pattern . . . Robert Woods Bliss, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Sims, Mrs. Russell Bennett, who topped off her frock with two silver foxes; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick William Wile, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Houghteling, Mr. and Mrs. William MacCracken, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke, Mr. and Mrs. William Jennings Price, Dr. and Mrs. Ernest Gruening, Mrs. E. Matthew Hanna, Mrs. C. Mathews Dick, in a black and white print with a white turban, and Irwin Laughlin were others present.

Mrs. Loose to Leave

Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose will close her apartment at the Shoreham today and leave for Kansas City, where she will remain until mid-June. She will then go to her summer home at Gloucester, Mass.

Melville Church 3d Behaves Beautifully At Christening in Warrenton Home

MELVILLE CHURCH 3d, son of Mr. and Mrs. Melville Church 2d, of Warrenton, behaved beautifully at his christening yesterday. He was not at all disturbed by the presence of many guests from the hunt country who gathered to see the afternoon ceremony, which took place at 5 o'clock at "Northcliffe," the Church home. The Rev. Paul Bowden, of the Warrenton Episcopal Church, officiated.

John Bailey, of Battle Creek, Mich., and Morris Clark, of Orange, Va., stood as godfathers, and Mrs. Harrison Colket, of Philadelphia, was named the infant's godmother. Mrs. Colket is a sister of Mrs. Church.

WEARING a frock in purple and fuchsia, the colors of her famous racing stables, Mrs. John Hay Whitney was an early arrival for the event. Others present included Mrs. Cary Jackson, William Lipscomb, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond McGrath, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin King, Mrs. Victor Froment, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Haserick and Miss Jane Wilbur. Miss Mary Tyler McCormack, whose engagement to Miss Wilbur's first cousin, Billy Wilbur, was announced recently, was also present. She spent the week-end with her fiance's mother and stepfather, Mr. and Mrs. Haserick.

Other guests included Mr. and Mrs. Robert Winmill and Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Duffey, also from the hunt country. Several of them stayed on for a su, per which followed the ceremony.

WHITE was a favorite color among the belles at the North Wales Club dance on Saturday evening. It was the choice of Miss Nancy Leiter, Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, and Mrs. Richard Farrar, of Nashville, Tenn., who was a guest of Miss Leiter, and who made a great hit with the local swains.

Everybody was much disappointed that Mr. and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., didn't attend the dance after all. The President's son left immediately after the races to get to Wilmington, Del., in time for dinner. Mrs. Roosevelt is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene DuPont, of Wilmington.

THE NORTH WALES CLUB was beautifully decorated with spring flowers, and the tables were covered with fine damask cloths. Cocktails were served in the large dining room. Breakfast appeared at 2 a. m., and dancing lasted until dawn. Meyer Davis was there in person, which always lends a certain cachet to a party. . .

The Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, and his brother, Count Alfred, wore their pink hunting coats. Others seen included Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Byrd, Miss Phyllis Langhorne, Henry G. Shirley, Virginia highway commissioner; Mr. and Mrs. Creighton Peet, who spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Winmill, and Miss Peggy Thompson, of Clearwater, Fla., who is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Fred Sharp.

HARRY WORCESTER SMITH will leave today to spend the summer in Lordvale, Mass., where he will finish writing two books on sports. He will be much missed by his many friends, but promises to return in time for the autumn foxhunting.

One of the largest dinner parties to be given will be that of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss. They maintain a home in New York, but finding it a bit too small for their guest list, Mrs. Bliss, who is a trustee of the museum, has borrowed for the evening the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. L. M. Barlow on Gramercy Park.

Among their guests will be the Swedish Minister and Mme. Bostrom, the Danish Envoy and Mme. Wadsted, Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, wife of the Norwegian Envoy; the Minister of Finland, Dr. Hjalmar Procope, the Swedish Commissioner to the World's Fair, Count Folke Bernadotte and Countess Bernadotte, Sir Kenneth and Lady Clark, of London; Mrs. Vincent Astor, Col. and Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. John W. The event celebrates the tenth anniversary of the Museum of Modern Art and the completion of its new $2,000,000 museum building on West Fifty-third street with its large sculpture garden running through to Fifty-fourth street on the site of the old Rockefeller mansions. Guests at the reception will be given a preview of the opening exhibition, "Art in Our Time," the largest the museum has ever held.

Fear a Menace, Says First Lady

"I have by now learned to care little or nothing for what other people may think," declared Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in an article released today in Look magazine. "I have a belief that one must hold to personal standards rather than wait for the judgment of others."

Mrs. Roosevelt made the statement in an article entitled, "How to Conquer Fear." As a nation, she maintains, we are becoming too fearsome. "As one travels around the country," she writes, "one hears more and more expression of sentiments like these: 'I am afraid of the Jews . . . I am afraid of the Negroes . . . I am afraid of the rise of Communism . . . I am afraid of the rise of Fascism . . . I am afraid of labor . . . I am afraid of the leaders of industry!' I am convinced that our fears of Communism and Fascism are nothing more than a lack of confidence in ourselves.

"Without this fear psychosis, we would have fewer pseudo patriotic societies fighting Communism, Fascism or the rise of labor or creating antagonism to foreign groups, all under the guise of proclaiming their allegiance to the age-old principles of Americanism. Americanism must be flexible enough to meet the changes of civilization. We must not allow ourselves to be carried away by our fears to hysterical false patriotism.

"As symbols for the things we dislike and fear," she said, "we have recently taken to using misleading names. If labor conditions displease us for any reason, we cry that labor has become Communistic. If existing government control seems irksome to us, we say we are on the way to dictatorship. Our feeling of panic has translated itself into a habit of denouncing everything which we don't like. Anything we fear or find annoying is labeled in the hope that the label will destroy it. I should like to see us divest ourselves of our fears and sit down reasonably together to face the present situation.

"There is something wrong with the economic situation, and we are not yet sure about the remedies," the First Lady continued. The real question is: How we can distribute the gains of modern invention so ALL the people benefit?"

Christ Church Aid Plans Tea

Under the auspices of the Women's Auxiliary of historic Christ Church in Alexandria, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Crockett, of 819 Prince street, will open their restored home for a silver tea on Wednesday from 1 to 6. Tea will be served from 4 to 6. At 4 o'clock, Mrs. Colgate Darden, wife of Representative Darden, and Mrs. Gay Withers, of Washington, will give a musical program.

Among the treasures which Mr. and Mrs. Crockett will show are a silver service over 100 years old; a chair owned by Thomas Jefferson, a lock of his hair, and an autographed letter from him. The exhibits will also include a collection of Persian and Indian shawls, some of them over 200 years old. Several old swords and family portraits are also among the possessions of Mr. and Mrs. Crockett.

Those in charge of arrangements for the tea include Mrs. Clarence J. Robinson, Mrs. John S. Dunn, Mrs. Kenneth Downes, Mrs. Howard C. Richards, Mrs. Edwin G. Pierce and Miss Clarence Brent Snowden.

Mr. Adams, who is connected with Westinghouse, is the son of Charles Waldo Adams, of Cannes, France, and Mrs. Helen McKey Adams, of Boston.

They will live in Bayside, Long Island, for the summer. Mrs. Adams has been doing professional work in New York.

Mrs. Eno's Work In Art Exhibit

Alberta A. Eno, of Washington; Lilian Giffen, of Baltimore, and other artists of the Capital region are among those represented in the invitation exhibition of paintings to show important phases of contemporary American art at Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass., from today to June 15. The foremost show of the year at this New England art center, held during the annual commencement period, the exhibition was selected by the Studio Guild, national art organization of New York, from among more than 1,000 paintings shown in national and museum exhibitions in the East, South and Midwest during the past year.

Mrs. Eno, wife of the traffic expert, William Phelps Eno, of Washington and New York, contributes to the Mount Holyoke exhibition one of the tropical bird paintings, "Splendor," which have been shown at a number of exhibitions this season. Lilian Giffen, of Baltimore, long a leader in art activities in the Capitol region, shows a summery Atlantic Coast seascape called "High Noon." "Cat on a Pillow" is by Georgia Morgan, director of art at Lynchburg College, Va., whose work was given a solo exhibition at the Randolph-Macon College last month.

Rixey Smiths Mark Birthday Of Glass Book

Reception Given for 200 at Country Estate Near Great Falls

The birthday—of a book—was celebrated yesterday afternoon by Mr. and Mrs. Rixey Smith with a large reception at their country home near Great Falls in Virginia. The host is also the author of the volume, and the subject is no less a personage than Senator Carter Glass. The book, which is entitled "Carter Glass: A Biography," will make its official appearance on Wednesday, Norman Beasley collaborated in the writing.

Senator Glass, whose attendance at parties is so rare as to be news in itself, was an early arrival at Gracelands. Most of the guests—and there were about 200 of them—chose to wander about the well-kept lawns, with their beautiful old English boxwood and flowering shrubs. From the edge of a lily pond drifted the strains of Hawaiian music to add to the gaiety.

Birthday Bouquet Feature of Party

On the diningroom table was an enormous, old-fashioned birthday bouquet, which came in for a great deal of admiring comment. Pouring tea during hte afternoon were Mrs. Smith's daughters, Mrs. J. Warren Cassady and Mrs. Louis H. Quinter, and others assisting included Mrs. Edward Howry, Mrs. Frederick Richardson and Mrs. Glen Phelps.

The hostess wore a floor-length gown of black chiffon simply cut, with a square neckline. The ladies who assisted her also chose garden party dresses which reached to the ground.

Gracelands, a rambling house of white frame and brick, dates back to 1730. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have restored it, keeping the original woodwork intact.

This was one party where the men greatly outnumbered the women, much to the delight of the pretty single girls present. Among the bachelors present were Representative Thomas C. Hennings and Waverly Taylor. There were also many young men from the Justice and Treasury departments.

Publisher's Wife Among Guests

Mrs. Edward E. Mills, wife of the publisher of the book, came from her home in New York for the party, accompanied by her son, Edward Mills, jr. Mrs. Blair Bannister, who is a sister of Senator Glass, came early and stayed late. Others present included Mr. and Mrs. Preston Delano, Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse, Judge and Mrs. John W. Price, R. D. W. Connor, National Archivist, and Mrs. Connor; Mrs. William Doak, whose home, Notre Nid, is nearby, and Mr. and Mrs. John McKee.

George Howe was accompanied by Mrs. Howe, who wore a black sheer frock with an off-the-face hat. Other guests included Mr. and Mrs. Elwood Seal, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Merriam, Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Miles, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Marshall, Mr. and Mrs. George Rothwell Brown and many others.

Mrs. Tribby Plans Tea This Afternoon

Mrs. J. Clinton Tribby will entertain at a tea this afternoon from 5 to 7 at the Army and Navy Country Club.

Assisting the hostess will be Mrs. Claude Pepper, Mrs. John H. Overton, Mrs. Herron Pearson, Mrs. Paul Maloney, Mrs. John McMillan, Mrs. Henry Grady, Mrs. Eugene O. Sykes, Mrs. Robert Gates, Mrs. Dwight Webb, Mrs. James Craig Peacock, Mrs. Chauncey Carter, Mrs. Mary Buford, Mrs. Louis Caldwell, Mrs. Garland Ferguson and Mrs. Thomas A. Wadden.

Mrs. J. R. Arnold Gives Luncheon

Mrs. John Randall Arnold was hostess at luncheon yesterday in her home on Macomb street.

Guests included Mrs. James H. Hughes, Mrs. John Clark, Mrs. George Williams, Mrs. Remsen Barnard, Mrs. Edward F. McKnew, Mrs. Neitah King, Mrs. Edward W. Holmes, Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, Mrs. Samuel J. L'Hommedieu, Miss Antoinette Rudolph, Miss Lucie Morimer and Mrs. Ellen M. Ridgely, mother of the hostess.

When Circumstances Promise to Hold Them Always Apart, Ought Man and Girl Keep Up Friendship?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I spent a week with my cousin in Dahlgren. There I met a man that I thought very much of, and I am sure he thinks a lot of me. We are 80 miles apart, and may never see each other again. We have been writing to each other since I returned home nearly three weeks ago. Also, we have talked with each other several times by telephone.

I am not going with any other boy and I am sure he is not going with any other girl. He hadn't gone with a girl since he joined the Marine service until he met me, and I would hate to disappoint him, as I am perfectly satisfied. He is six years older than I am, but I am still in love with him. I would like your advice as to whether I am doing the right thing in continuing to keep up the interest. Or do you think it would be best to try to forget him? Please publish a reply in your column of May 8. DISTANT LOVE.

DEAR D. L.: Your questions are slightly absurd. When you meet a person with whom you find yourself sufficiently en rapport to call him friend, why on earth shouldn't you promote friendship's growth through the medium of correspondence and telephonic communication, if no better means avail, if the proposition seems mutually agreeable, and if the respective dividends prove worth the effort invested? Since kindred spirits are rather a scarcity in the life of the average individual, tethered to a severely limited orbit, it seems to me that one should accept them in whatever guise they come, and not lay down too many rigid restrictions regarding the overt forms which the eventuating relationships may take.

Obviously, the question bothering you is whether the friendship, as currently conducted, may lead to marriage? And whether, if it should not, there is any point in sustaining the exchange? In bringing such an attitude to the situation, you are revealing a warped and crippling social perspective. Poor indeed, in human relationships, is the person whose social setup does not include more than one congenial, sympathetic friend of the opposite sex, who is appreciated simply for being what he is; whose value to one's self (if, indeed, friendship is to be reckoned in terms of what one personally gets out of it) is to be found in his other-ness to one's self; in the different, yet complementary, viewpoint on life he makes freely available to one.

However, to take a more practical view of the matter, since your questions are slanted from an eminently practical angle, which has early marriage as its aim—I should say that your overweening concern with the possible ultimate outcome of your present social negotiations with this man indicate a need for more diversified masculine contacts that you possess, as yet. Because of this lack, you are morbidly attaching undue importance to the exchange. If you had more men friends, you would casually add another to the list as a mater of course; be pleased by his attentions, as interested in him as his personality warranted, and content to let the relationship shape itself spontaneously, both now and in the future.

So, my advice to you would be to maintain this friendship, on the one hand, but at face value only; and, on the other hand, to form as many friendships with men on the immediate scene as you can gracefully manage. Because you are in correspondence with one man it does not mean that you must or should withdraw from the world of other men. As a matter of fact, you would be going a long way toward defeating your primary objective of marriage in doing so. Men, as a rule, are inclined to be wary of the woman who hasn't a choice of suitors, and they are distastefully disturbed by the almost invariably obsessive responsiveness of the lady who fixes on one of them her Only Hope.

Of course, this man's opportunities for sentimental or romantic friendships may be as limited or as neglected, as yours, and, like you, he may elect to make a virtue of necessity, or lack of initiative, by holding you up as the deliberately chosen One Woman in his life, and then confidently expect a reciprocal compliment from you. However, I don't think you should assume or abide by any such tacit arrangement, even supposing he lived next door.

Until you are married, or pledged to be married, you have an obligation to your own mental health and sense of social well being, to contact life at as many points, through as many personalities of either sex, as can be achieved through consistently amiable, receptive effort. Persons in some stratas of society recognize no necessity to discontinue their friendships with the opposite sex either during the betrothal period or after marriage; but others, of a more conventional turn of mind (those who belong to our so-called Middle Class group), usually do relinquish such alliances when mutual love is declared, and particularly after marriage plans are under way. But even these scrupulous adherents to the letter (as well as the spirit) of monogamous behavior, would smile at the folly of the girl who thought, because she was writing to a newly met man, that she had forfeited the right to have other beaux.

There would be only one reason why you should discontinue the moot correspondence and "try to forget" the man, and that would be in order to obviate any possibility of building unfounded hopes around his image. Correspondence does have a way of keeping the correspondent rather continuously in one's thoughts; and should that reminder become an ever-present invitation to indulge in bootless day-dreaming, which gets between the dreamer and the realities of life in the immediate scene, it would constitute a serious threat to his emotional balance. In such cases, foresight would decree the complete and final abandonment of the contact.

Which school of action rules you? The trimly tailored shirtmaker suit or the "I'll-be-dainty-if-it-kills-me" variety? Two versions of the abbreviated sun suit are illustrated here. Both were photographed at recent fashion showings. The lass at left wears a crisply tailored suit of iris-colored rayon jersey. The free-and-easy cut of the combined shirt and shorts is chastened by a button-down-the-front shirt, topped by a lastex band. The other girl wears a Baby Bunting beach coat of quilted cotton, sprayed all over with pink and blue posies. The matching dressmaker swim suit beneath is trimmed in rick rack

Your Figure Madam

By Ida Jean Kain.

Settled Look of Middle Age May Be Forestalled Simple Exercises Strengthen Abdominal Muscles

IF YOU are middle-aged, you are entitled to a middle-aged figure—but you do not have to have one. That settling down look begins in the middle of your figure, a section equipped with muscles that are fully equal to the task of keeping you slim and trim all your life.

The great front muscles forming the abdominal girdle run up and down, parallel to the spine. A second set runs crosswise and a third set runs diagonally. The muscular girdle nature gave you is no sloppy affair, if kept in tone.

Outdoor Exercise Best

As a general rule, corrective exercise is just a substitute for outdoor activities. It would be better if more women kept their figures through sports. But very few sports afford sufficient exercise for the important muscles composing the abdominal girdle. Certainly such activities as housework and walking cannot be counted on to keep these muscles strong.

Unless you take special exercise, the muscles become slack and the weight of the internal organs cause an unsightly bulge. Then all that fine muscular network is about as much help to your figure as an old, worn-out girdle.

Here are some exercises which will give you a good start toward restoring your internal girdle to tone:

Begin by lying flat on the back on the floor, knees flexed and the feet flat on the floor. Pull in with the muscles of the abdomen and down with lower back until the entire back is flat on the floor. Now twist the waist, keeping the legs together, rest the right thigh on the floor, shoot the legs straight out. Roll the hips back to starting position as the legs are drawn up again, feet on floor near the buttocks. Twist to the opposite side, resting left thigh on floor, and repeat.

Few Minutes a Day

The second exercise is to lie on the back on the floor, knees bent and feet on the floor up near the buttocks. Grasp the ankles firmly with each hand and lift the hips off the floor, with the body in a straight line from chest to knees. Hold for a second, release, relax and repeat.

Just a few minutes of specific exercise every day is all you need to keep your figure youthfully trim.

Today's Health Talk

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

In 50,000 letters written by the lay public to the American Society for the Control of Cancer, the following questions are the most frequent on treatment of cancer. The answers furnish the best modern scientific judgment.

How should cancer be treated? By surgery, x-ray, radium, or a combination of the three in the earliest possible stage of the disease. No other form of treatment is of any value.

Are x-ray treatments good for all kinds of cancer? No. Treatment depends on type and location of the growth. Some cancers will not respond to x-ray or radium treatment, but must be treated by surgery.

What is the difference in action of x-rays and radium on cancer tissue? There is no essential difference. When properly used, both will destroy cancer cells without seriously injuring the normal cells.

How is radium used? Radium in hollow needles is inserted into the cancer growth or in the tissue surrounding it, or both, and removed after treatment is concluded. Radium in a suitable container may be placed in contact with the growth, as in cancer of the skin. In larger quantities it may be used at a distance from the body, the rays passing through an opening in the container into the cancerous growth. The emanating gas of radium, known as radon, in suitable containers may be used in the same manner as the radium salt from which it is obtained.

Should all moles be removed? No. A flat, colorless mole is probably as harmless as a freckle. Bluish black hairless moles, especially when subject to irritation, should be removed. Any mole or wart showing change in size or color should be promptly and completely removed and the removed tissue examined under a microscope to determine if cancer is present.

Strict Protocol Rules When New York Hotels Fly Foreign Flags

New York, May 7.

FOR SEVERAL years it has been very stylish here for the biggest and fanciest hotels to fly foreign flags in honor of whatever distinguished visitors they may have. There are twin poles, of course, with Old Glory whipping from one. And right now, with New York filled by official visitors, our avenues are bright with flags of many nations.

ALICE HUGHES

On Fifth avenue of a sunny Sunday I saw the Swiss ensign flying from the Gotham Hotel, while right across the street Brother Vince Astor's St. Regis bore the French and Italian flags in addition to our own. From the Park avenue frontage of the Waldorf-Astoria waved the proud colors of Norway, in honor of Crown Prince Olav and his princess, Martha, who had an apartment in the towers of that noted hostelry.

Most people don't know that this flying of foreign flags by New York hotels is governed by very strict protocol. The mere fact that M. Gotchoff, hide and hoof tycoon of Bulgaria, is stopping at the Grand Hotel Superba on the Bowery is no excuse for flying that noble nation's banner.

An authority on the flag code here is Dell'Agnese, head of the Waldorf's foreign department and custodian of its flags. "Flags are never flown save to honor official government personages who are staying with us," he tell me. "The relative size of countries has nothing to do with such honors paid. An ambassador from a small country is always honored in preference to a minister from a large nation." And since the Waldorf has three sets of flag staffs on three frontages, Dell'Agnese is often busy reshuffling his banners, especially these days. The Park avenue poles, of course, honor the top guest. Quite intricate for such a simple matter, no? Why the first time the red flag of Soviet Russia was properly flown in New York was from a hotel, soon after the arrival of its first accredited envoy here!

The Gentler Sex

Motor Tour

At last you are going to take that spring drive you have so long dreamed about. Go nowhere in particular—just loiter along and enjoy the green meadows, the apple blossoms, the dogwood. Stop when and where you fancy. Not worry about arriving anywhere at a certain hour. Forget watches, mileage, maps. For a few precious leisurely days emancipate yourself from the whip of old Father Time.

He suggests starting in the general direction of Southtown. It's ordinarily a 2-day drive, but the two of you will take a week if necessary to get there. You are NOT going to be hurried.

You drive out of town in the radiant freshness of a May morning following a white beckoning highway. What a tender young green the grass is! How gracefully the trees wave their new delicate leaves in the breezes! In the pastures are lambs with their ewes, cows with their calves, mares with their colts. How young everything is! And how beautiful!

Wait, though! Maybe you are going a little fast. The speedometer says 40 miles. You call it to his attention. Oh— he says he haden't realized it. He will slow down at once.

Apple and plum orchards begin to glide past. Pink splotches of dogwood dot the hillsides. Great lilac bushes in the yards of old homesteads bend with their lavender sprays. Locust trees flaunt their delicate tracery of leaves against pale blue skies . . . Wait! Say, that speedometer has crept up to 40 miles again!

He says he hadn't noticed it but he was just wondering . . . He takes out his watch. It is 12:30 o'clock now. That last sign said "OLDTOWN—30 MILES" It would be a good place to eat . . . After all, you can't afford to ruin your stomachs at one of these cheap lunch counters. Now maybe if he'd speed up a little . . .

You agree that a quaint historic inn or a little tea house in Oldtown would be better than a hot dog stand. He steps on the gas. The countryside whizzes by. Your car charges into Oldtown at 15 minutes past 1 o'clock.

You cannot find the historic inn. Everyone gives you a different direction. He is hungry and impatient. You go into the town hotel have a lunch of weiners and sauer kraut, mashed potatoes, sweet potatoes, macaroni, boiled beets and bread pudding served on an egg-stained tablecloth.

You resume your journey leisurely. You are now really getting into the apple blossom country and you must go slowly . . . enjoy the beauty to the fullest. He agrees, looks at his watch. It's 2:15 and he was just wondering . . .

Now you are simply not going to hurry, you remind him. No, of course not, he says consulting his road map. However . . . well you will have to sleep somewhere. Now there's Middletown but of course it's too far—200 miles—Of course there's Newtown—it's only 100 miles, but you'd probably get in there pretty early, and he'd sort of hate to stop without doing 300 miles a day . . .

Why not just go along moderately, you suggest, and decide what to do after you get to Newtown? . . . He agrees and slows down to 30 miles. You resume your study of the spring landscape . . . Of course now if you got into Newtown around 5:30 . . . or 6 you might be able to get a decent meal—oh why will you let yourself think of such things in the midst of so much beauty?

You dash into Newtown at 5:30. It's really too early to eat, he points out—after all that lunch. Say—suppose you get some coffee and orange juice or something light and then try to make Midtown by 9:30 or 10 o'clock? There's a good hotel there and—

"Let's do," you agree enthusiastically.

You are soon charging again along the highway into the shadows of evening.

"You know, if we get up really early in the morning," he says, "we ought to be able to get into Southtown anyway by midnight tomorrow."

Salads Find Affinities in Hot Dressings

My Martha Ellyn.
The Post Food Editor.

SALADS have affinities in dressings. A salad bowl special is a hearty salad made with a hot salad dressing. This type of salad may be made from such foods as potatoes, bacon, salmon, cheese and eggs, besides the usual vegetable standbys. Each is mated to its affinity in the way of a dressing. If you are looking for a fillip to your meals try the following recipe.

Salad Bowl Special

Boil potatoes in jackets until tender, and dice to make 4 cups. Add ½ diced celery, 4 slices of fried crisps and chopped bacon, 3 tablespoons chopped onion, ¾ cup hot halad dressing. Arrange a border of shredded lettuce around the edge of salad bowl, and inside arrange alternate tomato wedges and deviled egg halves garnished with rings of green pepper. Sprinkle some chopped bacon on top.

Hot Salad Dressing

Blend 2 tablespoons sugar and 1 teaspoon flour. Add 4 tablespoons bacon fat, 1 teaspon dry mustard, 1-3 cup vinegar, ¼ cup water and ½ teaspoon salt. Cook for 2 minutes. Pour over the mixture 2 slightly beaten egg yolks and mix while hot with the potato salad mixture.

Flandin Sees Civilization's End in War

French Leader Says Revolution Will Come If Alarm Continues

By Pierre-Etienne Flandin

Paris, May 7.—The whole world has its eyes fixed upon Danzig. The conviction is spreading that Hitler is preparing a further coup de force. In these circumstances, as usual, the most sensational rumors are current. True and false news intermingle their effects. All is done to entertain a state of alarm in the populations. It appears to become a system confirmed by experience to create a state of tension of European opinion in such a way that any solution, even the worst, is received with a sigh of relief. . . .

The risk for the unfortunate peoples of Europe increases with the aggravation of the conflict between the Germanic will to conquer and the democratic will to resist and may finally result in an actual war.

Danzig "Merely An Episode"

Whatever happens, Danzig is merely an episode of the revision of the peace treaties. This revision began in fact immediately after the signing of the Treaty of Versailles. It has since continued at an increased pace. . . .

I do not propose to recall all the violations of the peace treaties that have taken place nor to discuss the responsibility incurred by almost all statesmen who have diverted the policy of the nations and who in their ignorance, blindness or cowardice have contributed to the aggravation of the international situation. Such a state of affairs would have appeared impossible some years ago, but now there threatens to be a new general conflagration, a new torrent of tears and blood to be unleashed perhaps within a few weeks and exercise its ravages upon completely innocent peoples.

But if we are really on the verge of a catastrophe of this kind, we should settle questions of method and policy which will enable us to act more intelligently and more usefully in this problem of peace or war.

Has it finally been understood that the contemporary structure of international life implies more than ever economic solidarity in addition to political agreement? And if it is proposed to institute a new international order, what will it be? I raise these questions without presuming to answer them.

"Crime Against Peoples"

But I raise them in view of the fact that peoples may once more be committed to international war without the objects of the conflagration being clearly defined and understood. This would be a veritable crime against an unfortunate community of peoples which would have to sacrifice their well-being and hopes of a better future to the dreams of utopists and speculations of the war merchants.

And I wish finally to draw the attention of my readers to a few fundamental facts.

Certain nations, like individuals, wish instinctively to dominate, regardless of their political system of government. Under a democratic and parliamentary regime, Germany acted in exactly the same way as the totalitarian Germany of the Fuehrer. The views held by Mr. Stresemann with regard to the unilateral repudiation were just the same as those of Hitler.

If there were a new world war, in which Germany would doubtless be defeated, the German people would probably become Communist's—a Communist nation of 80,000,000 souls. But the Communist regime, if one goes by the Russian example, excludes neither armies nor arms. And an imperialism based upon the victory of universal revolution would easily be substituted for that of the National Socialists which has succeeded that of William II and Frederick II and the emperors of the Holy Roman Empire.

But a people cannot be destroyed and the present problem is not that of the potential co-existence of the totalitarian regimes with those of the democratic power but that of relations between Germany and the other states and more generally of the predatory people with the others.

Fears for Civilization

If this problem cannot be solved otherwise than by war every 20 years it is possible to predict with certainty that it will mean the end of the present era of civilization. But could not another solution be found if the substance of the problem were examined?

Danzig may offer the means to this end. The extraordinary military effort accomplished by Great Britain and France has dispelled the inferiority of their opposition at the moment of the Munich conference. Poland with her effective military backing has changed camps since September. Europe can no longer fall a prey to German supremacy. Each power can negotiate on a footing of equality. . . .

Further, no one denies that Europe cannot live in the present state of economic and political geography and that by arms or by negotiations a new statute must be created to put an end to the armaments race and economic war.

Royal Danes Meet Great And Humble of Washington

Danes

Later, Swedish Minister Bostrom, also speaking in Danish, told the delighted throng that among the very nicest people in Washington were the Danes and the Swedes, "and that's that." "The Norwegians are nice, too," he added, in afterthought.

With only a brief respite to catch their breath and flex their fingers the Prince and Princess greeted Government notables at 5 p. m. Limousines of Congressional, executive and judicial leaders were lined three deep on Belmont and Crescent roads for more than an hour.

Can't Get Let Off

Half through the reception the Prince turned to Minister Wadsted with a half-serious plea to be let off, out of sheer exhaustion.

"Oh, no, you don't," Wadsted answered.

In the evening the royal pair were entertained at dinner by the Swedish minister.

Today the Crown Prince and Princess, first royal visitors this year, will resume their sightseeing tour. They will tour the Capitol, Supreme Court and Congressional Library and then attend the usual State Department luncheon which Secretary Hull gives for visiting governmental heads at the Carlton Hotel.

To Visit Annapolis

His Highness will leave with his retinue for Annapolis from the Shoreham while the Princess will return to her suite at the Shoreham Hotel. Later, after a visit to the Governor's Mansion and the Naval Academy, the Prince will return via the Defense Highway.

Tonight they will dine privately at the Danish Legation. They will leave at 2 a. m. tomorrow for New York.

Ruppert Home For Aged Raises Flag Before 400

More than 400 persons looked on yesterday afternoon as Christian Heurich, 96, vice president of trustees of Ruppert Home for the Aged, aided by Boy and Girl Scouts of the Fourteenth Division, raised the flag recently donated to the home by Mrs. Babette Krumke, president of the Ladies' Aid Society.

Representative Luther Patrick (Democrat), of Alabama, spoke briefly at the exercises, held in front of the home at 2100 Good Hope road southeast. Mrs. Ernest W. Brown, wife of Maj. Brown and daughter of Mrs. Krumke, and also vice president of the Ladies' Aid, participated, as well as William Gude, board president, and others.

The Metropolitan Police Boys' Club Band provided music, and a benefit supper was served. The Rev. Charles Enders gave the invocation, and the Rev. John F. Tapy pronounced the benediction.

Indians Declare Independence From New York

Akron, N. Y., May 7 (AP).—Chiefs of the Seneca nation sent to Gov. Lehman today a declaration of independence from New York State laws, which they held were not applicable to them as wards of the Federal Government.

Pointing out in the past they acquiesced to State legislation until it could be shaken off in Federal courts, the Council of Chiefs on the Tonawanda reservation told the Governor henceforth "all such laws will discontinue to be recognized by the Tonawanda band of the Seneca nation." The Senecas asserted State legislation trespassed on the prerogatives of their council.

Rosson was taken into custody allegedly for photographing military objects and it was understood he and his wife were being held at Graz, Austria.

Ulterior Motive Seen in Schacht Visit to Mexico

Presence in Mexico City of the German economic wizard, Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, yesterday brought from authoritative Washington quarters an expression he may have been sent there to wreck Mexican-American oil negotiations.

The paths of Schacht and Donald R. Richberg, counsel for 17 American oil companies, crossed at San Antonio, Tex., April 28. Richberg was en route to Santillo, Mexico for conferences with President Cardenas. Schacht was described by his son as on a "sight-seeing tour."

Sources close to the Cardenas-Richberg negotiations suggested Schacht's object might be to proffer Mexico a contract for absorption by Germany, Italy and Japan, of its entire export petroleum output. Except for the axis powers, the world generally has boycotted Mexican oil since that government's expropriation of British-American oil properties.

Astronomer Tells How Star Is Made

Plan of Universe Revealed by Study Of 800 Nebulae

By the Associated Press.

McDonald Observatory, Fort Davis, Tex., May 7.—The main architectural plan of creation, which reveals how stars were made and that new ones are still being created out of primeval matter, has been discovered by the world's greatest telescope.

The evidence, much of it previously unpublished and new to astronomers, was presented to a Sunday evening gathering of the International Astronomical Conference here for dedication of the world's second largest telescope, the 82-inch telescope at this new observatory.

Dr. Edwin Hubble, of Mount Wilson Observatory, Calif., whose reports of things seen by the 100-inch eye have more than once in the past guided ideas of astronomers, made the report.

He described 800 nebulae, which show an unbroken sequence of change, from clouds of glowing material to stars in huge spirals. Each spiral is a universe by itself and apparently is as vast as the Milky Way.

Dr. Hubble said the "sequence" of the neblae shows four main phases. The first is globular masses, merely huge balls of apparently formless primeval matter, which are finely divided, including much dust and gas.

The elliptical form, the second phase, comes from a spinning motion which causes the gobs of matter to flatten, eventually to the shape of a lens.

In the last stage cracks appear, assumed to be largely collections of primeval dust and gas separating itself from the rest of the matter as the latter begins to develop definite structure.

The cracks lead to formation of two spiral arms, starting deep within the nebulae. The final stage is the appearance of the distinct stars, first in the spiral arms.

1,285,671 See World's Fair In First 7 Days

New York, May 7 (AP).—The New York World's Fair, gathering momentum for a week, hit its stride today with 1,285,671 attendance registered during the first seven days.

The Swiss pavilion was dedicated during the morning and the Brazilian pavilion in midafternoon with some 3,000 American Gold Star Mothers participating in a program at the Goodrich Arena.

In dedicating the Brazilian exhibit—"Good Neighbor Hall—Armando Vidal, Brazilian commissioner general, said " * * Similarity in our political organizations, and our international feelings, has created * * * between the United States and Brazil * * * mutual faith and confidence which we are celebrating on this day."

At the Swiss dedication Victor Nef, Swiss commissioner general to the fair, said that while Switzerland did not discover America, many Swiss had helped build the country politically and economically.

A man was arrested yesterday morning by three policemen as he left the rear door of a Sanitary Grocery Store, 1005 Fourth street southwest, with a bag over his shoulder containing 26 cartons of cigarettes over his shoulder. James Sommerville, 29, of 1244 Union street southwest, was charged with housebreaking.

Mrs. Ann Kreiger, proprietor of the Lafayette Cafe, 1621 H street northwest, reported to police that her establishment was looted of a large quantity of liquor.

Capt. Frank S. Flynn, who lives on his boat, Leatherwood, tied to the old engineers' dock in Washington Channel, reported a 125-pound kedge anchor, with 40 feet of rope, was stolen from the boat.

Visiting Military Doctors Like U. S. and Its Girls, Dislike War

Turkish Delegate to International Congress Impressed by Bigness of Everything; Germans, French, Italians Rub Shoulders

Medecin Colonel Jean-Marie Auguste Felician Lambert des Cilleuls can go to Hollywood and get a job any time he tires of his duties as chief of the technical section of the French army health service. Because, with his stocky frame, iron gray hair, chest full of medals and fierce handlebar mustache, he looks exactly like the movies believe a brusque, kind-hearted regimental commander of the Foreign Legion should look.

DES CELLEULS

War in Europe, Colonel? "Ah"—the hands go out in the gesture which will be French until the last Frenchman dies—"who knows? Nous sommes toujour tres optimiste. It's necessary to be optimistic—especially in our environment.

"And it's all the more necessary for this congress to see that the wounded are respected. We must agree to that here, among ourselves, without regard to what the relations are between our countries."

Col. Des Cilleuls is attending the tenth international congress of military medicine and pharmacy, formally opening tomorrow at the Willard Hotel. He pointed out that France laid the congress' foundations in 1878.

Soldiers Don't Give Interviews

Oberfeldarzt Dr. Hans Hartleben, stiff, slender and fortyish, clicked his heels smartly and thrust out his hand to be shaken. Realization dawning, however, he began to protest that officers gave out no interviews.

HARTLEBEN

Happy he was to be here, to be sure, but beyond that, no interviews. Goaded by the question whether it was true that the German army got the cream of the rations while the rest of the German population did without a proper food supply, Col. Hartleben paused long enough to deny the story, emphatically. Then he resumed his argument that he did not care to become involved in a political discussion.

"Wir sind Soldaten," said Col. Hartleben, "and in Germany it is not customary for soldiers to give interviews." With another click of the heels, the smartly groomed "Feldgrau" uniform disappeared into a preconvention meeting of the International Military Medicine Conference.

Italian Authority Among Conferees

Dr. Aldo Castellani, the doctor who made Mussolini's conquest of Ethiopia possible, is quite sure there'll be no world war and that "everything is going to be all right."

CASTELLANI

"I am no politician, mind you," said the jolly authority on tropical diseases, who was knighted by the British Crown for his wartime services to England, "but speaking simply as an ordinary Italian citizen I think there is nothing to fear.

"Why, Mussolini is making great plans for the fair in Italy next year. Look, I'll show you the book he has had published on the coming exhibits."

Sir Aldo looked high and low through his many book-filled suitcases, but the brochure was not to be found.

Argentina Whips Yellow Fever

"Argentina is a healthy country. This is proved by the healthy figure of its delegate to this congress," said Dr. Ramon Antonio Alcaraz, inspector of the Argentine army pharmaceutical services, as he slapped his ample girth with his experienced doctor's hands. He added that the Argentine's chief medical problem is prophylaxis against contagious diseases, among which, however, yellow fever is no longer a menace.

ALCARAZ

As for America—Dr. Alcaraz ejaculated a Latin adjective which sounded like a mixture of marvelous, incredible aand terrific. He likes it. All South Americans, he said, want to go to "la ciudad," as if there were only one city in the United States.

He meant, of course, New York, which is admired below the Equator, he reminded, because of its size. But South Americans also want to see Washington, he amended gracefully, because of its beauty. "The most beautiful city in the world!"

500 Military Doctors Open Parley Here

Tenth International Congress of Medicine And Pharmacy Also to Convene

Five hundred of the Government's top-ranking medicos—commissioned in the military forces, Veterans' Administration, National Guard and Public Health Service—are meeting in Washington today to talk shop.

Called to order by its president, Surgeon General Thomas Parran, of the Public Health Service, the forty-seventh annual convention of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States will convene at 9 a. m. at the Willard. The program continues throughout the day, merging tomorrow and Wednesday with that of the Tenth International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy.

More Humane War Is Goal

The congress, the first in the Western Hemisphere for almost 20 years, will be primarily devoted to making war more humane. Representatives of 30 nations, many of which are at swords' points, will sit shoulder to shoulder and discuss means of aiding victims of aerial warfare and preventing epidemics following bombing raids.

Almost all of the great powers will be represented. Conspicuously absent, with eleventh-hour apologies, will be a 19-man Polish delegation and a smaller one from Yugoslavia.

Two generals and an admiral from Germany, an Italian lieutenant general and numerous brigadier and major generals from this country will head the 125 delegates. Although the sessions will not open formally until tomorrow, preconvention committee meetings were held yesterday and a dinner for the permanent committee was tendered last night at the Willard by Maj. Gen. Charles R. Reynolds.

Today Commissioner Hazen will welcome the Military Surgeons convention to Washington, where annual gatherings have been held six times since the organization was founded in 1891. After an address by Dr. Parran and a luncheon at the Willard for the ladies, delegates will settle down to an afternoon's discussion of aviation medicine.

To discuss Effect of Flight

Chief problem is what happens to the human body under conditions of high speed, high altitude and sustained flight. The question is how much mental strain a wartime flier can undergo before "cracking."

Surgeons will outline the problems resulting from military airplanes moving at 350 to 400 miles per hour, when a quarter of a minute's deliberation by the pilot finds him 2 miles from the point where he started to think.

Col. Arnold D. Tuttle, Capt. Harry G. Armstrong and Lieut. Raymond A. Lowry, of the Army Medical Corps, and Air Commodore H. E. Wittingham, of the Royal Air Force of Great Britain, will speak. Capt. Armstrong will tell of experiments in a special low-pressure tank at Wright Field, where it was demonstrated that lack of oxygen leaves the most fearless pilot panicky and irresponsible.

Tomorrow, science will combine with military pomp when the delegates, in full uniform, hold their annual banquet at the Willard. Assistant Secretary of War Louis Johnson will be the principal speaker.

More than 125 foreign delegates are coming to the International Congress, opening formal sessions at the Willard on Tuesday. They include representatives of 32 different nations with which America has diplomatic relations.

Culpeper Man Found Dead in Potomac

The body of a man tentatively identified through papers in his coat pocket as William Yancey, 45, of Culpeper, Va., was found floating in the Potomac near the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge yesterday.

The body was first noticed by two youngsters strolling across the bridge. The harbor patrol boat turned it over to the coroner.

Dr. R. A. Betts Speaks At Christ Lutheran Church in Morning

The Bible is a powerful instrument for the spread of Democracy, Dr. Rome A. Betts, associate secretary of the American Bible Society, said here at yesterday's observance of "Bible Month."

Speaking at Christ Lutheran Church's morning service, he emphasized that wherever the Bible has been widely circulated and read, it carried with it the essence of democracy embodied in its moral and spiritual principles. He addressed the Kendall Baptists last night.

Among the other guest speakers was Dr. E. S. Bookmyer, of the Philadelphia unit of the American Bible Society, who told a congregation Wallace Memorial United Presbyterian Church that "a new day will dawn for individuals and nations when they become Bible-conscious." He spoke last night at Fifth Baptist Church.

Dr. Francis C. Stifler, Dr. George C. Dilworth, Dr. Edgar C. Powers and the Rev. John C. Lewis, active in the American Bible Society, also occupied local pulpits as guest preachers. They will join with other leaders of the "Back to the Bible" movement in attending a businessmen's luncheon today at 12:30 p. m. at the Washington Hotel.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, chief of Metropolitan Police, and Clark Griffith, owner of the Washington baseball team, in addition to legislators and other prominent men, are expected to be present for the function, over which Dr. Charles E. Resser, chairman of the local committee of the Bible movement and president of the D. C. Sunday School Association, will preside.

Serving on his committee are Ernest H. Van Fossan, Daniel C. Roper, Designated-Minister to Canada; Dr. Charles G. Abbot, Justice Bolitha J. Laws, Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, Judge Ben H. Littleton, Walter T. Landis and others.

Capital News In Brief

Judge Cayton Speaks

"Real hopes for the highest ideals of Judaism and civilization" were seen last night by Judge Nathan Cayton, of Municipal Court, speaking at the annual banquet of the Mizrachi women's organization at the Beth Sholom Synagogue.

Judge Cayton praised the women for their work in aiding "orphans and other unfortunates in Palestine."

Lost: $190

Maybe a fried chicken dinner waited at home and maybe not, but something developed in an officer of First Seventh Day Adventist Church (colored), 624 Eighth street northeast, so great a zeal to get home that last night the church was out $190.

Police were informed the officer, with a satchel containing the day's collections, started for home via bus. Waiting for the bus at Eighth and K streets northeast, he placed the satchel on the steps of a building and forgot it when his vehicle came along.

He remembered the satchel and the money some 15 minutes later, he told police, but found both gone on his hurried return to the corner.

Cab Driver Robbed

Two colored strong-arm bandits robbed Murray Douglas, 37, of 1507 Park road, of $6 and his trousers last night. Douglas, a cab driver, picked up the two men at First and H streets northwest and drove them to Fifty-eighth and Eades street southeast, where they forced him out of the car, removed his trousers and tore them in half.

Baltimore Four Wins Virginia Bridge Tourney

Second Team From Same City Runner-up; Defenders Are Third

The Northern Virginia bridge tournament was concluded last night in Alexandria at the George Mason Hotel with victory for a Baltimore foursome which scored a one-match lead over another team from the same city.

Joseph Grinsfelder, an official of the Maryland Bridge League, captained the winners. His teammates were Irwin Fisher, C. Bowie and Charles Shapiro. Fisher was an International Olympic Bridge champion in 1938, the first time a U. S. player made the rating.

Dr. L. W. Lord, captain of the runners-up, finished the last Virginia team match in the same position. His teammates last night were Mrs. Lord, John Crawford and A. Schlessinger. Fifty-five boards were played through two sessions, the winners scoring 36 to 35 for the Lord team.

Defending champions, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Stockvis, Lewis and Lloyd Tubbs, a local line-up, ranked third with 32 boards. Twelve teams played through two sessions without elimination.

Several crack outfits from the District were snowed under. Newman, Roth, Mothershed, and Hamlin tied the winning team with 14 boards at the close of the first session but wilted under fire in the finals. On the other hand the defenders improved their position in the last round as they had finished the first in fourth place.

The team match followed the precedent of previous events in which all titles were lost by the defending champions. In the open pair contest played Saturday Mrs. F. W. Harrison, of Norfolk, and E. Jaffee, Washington, captured the trophy won the year before by Comdr. W. A. Corley and Dr. C. C. McDonnell.

J. H. Lemon and J. D. Mothershed were runners-up. Lemon is the president of the American Contract Bridge League, sponsoring association for the Alexandria Tournament. Lord and Schlessinger were paired in third place. Tom Hamlin and L. R. Watson, jr., finished fourth and Mrs. E. Behrend and M. I. Strause, Baltimore, fifth.

Northwest Rally to Urge City Council

Civic Leaders To Address Mass Meeting Tonight At Thomson School

A mass meeting of Northwest residents tonight at the Thomson School to intensify the drive for a reorganization of the District government with control vested in an elected city council will highlight citizens' associations' business this week.

Civic leaders including William McK. Clayton, first president of the Federation of Citizens Associations; L. A. Carruthers, present federation head; Charles M. Thomas, president of the Federation of Civic Associations, and Arthur Smith, first president of the Federation of Businessmen's Association, will address the meeting called to spur the self-government petition through sending 25,000 postcards to Representative Jennings Randolph, chairman of the House District Committee.

School Proposals Pertinent

Discussion of proposals pertinent to schools to be erected or now under construction will mark meetings at four associations in different sections.

Piney Branch citizens tonight will pass on the proposal to establish a new model trade school at Upshur street between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets northwest. Members had previously advocated locating a new building for Wilson Teachers' College, together with a neighborhood recreational ground, on that site.

Failure of Congress to include appropriations for a new school in Southeast in the District supply bill will be discussed by the Hill Crest Citizens Association tonight. At a meeting Wednesday, Michigan Park members will lay plans for a census of children of school-age to determine the required size of the new Bunker Hill school.

Scout Troop to Be Organized

At the Wednesday meeting of the North Randle Highlands Association the governing committee made up of church, police, P.-T. A. and school officials, will discuss the program for the new playground for which land has already been allotted by the National Capital Parks and Planning Commission.

The meeting will also mark the organization of a new Boy Scout troop, with ceremonies attendant on the presentation of troop colors to the new scouts and their scoutmaster.

Vivisection League Protests Denial of Exhibits at Fair

Because New York's World Fair is permitting "the display of nude bodies" but refused to grant space for exhibits by the Vivisection Investigation League, the league asked Congress last night to investigate.

Pointing out the league's request for space was denied on the grounds that "the subject of the proposed display was controversial," league officials, in letters to Vice President Garner and Speaker Bankhead, asserted "the display of nude bodies at the fair is certainly a highly controversial subject."

The letters, signed by Mrs. Clinton Pinckney Farrell, league president, and Charles Edward Russell, member of the board of directors, asked Congress to investigate because the fair "is being financed partly with Federal funds," and the league "has been discriminated against in violation of the spirit of the Federal Constitution."

Fr. Cartwright States Hopes for Catholic Theater

The Catholic theater movement may serve to rid the modern stage of its "contempt of religion" and its "scrawling expressionism," the Rev. John J. Cartwright, pastor of Immaculate Conception Church, last night told an audience at the Catholic University music building.

Following Father Cartwright's talk, the Washington Chapter of the Blackfriars Guild presented "The Princess Marries the Page."

Mice Found to Carry Grave Disease of Brain; Blamed for Infection of Gallinger Patients

Washington Doctors Learn Ailment Is Passed to Humans

Those harmless-looking house mice that skitter across the basement floor are actually the carriers of a serious brain disease as formidable as its name—lymphocytic choriomeninigtis—two District doctors have discovered.

Although the spread of the ailment—which itself was identified only five years ago—by rodents had been suspected, it was not proved until Dr. Charles Armstrong, a Public Health Service physician, and Dr. Lewis K. Sweet found the virus in three of five mice they trapped in the home of two District sufferers.

The discovery culminated four years' research by Dr. Armstrong. He first suspected that the "reservoir" or the cause of the brain disease might be in mice when several white mice and wild rodents proved susceptible to the disease when brought in contact with it in his laboratory.

Trapped in Houses

When mice in the laboratories of scientists in Princeton, N. J., and in France were reported reacting in the same way, Dr. Armstrong and Dr. Sweet were convinced of the theory.

They began their field work by trapping mice in the homes of two

Gallinger Hospital patients suffering from the disease, as well as in homes where the disease was not known to exist.

Not only did the mice in the sufferers' residences prove to be heavily-loaded carriers of the virus, while mice in other homes were uninfected, but other persons in homes of the sufferers were found to be infected. The transmission is accomplished apparently through soiling of food by the mice, Dr. Armstrong said.

Virus Transmitted In Houses Through Food Contamination

Disease Widespread

Transmission of the disease is "widespread" Dr. Armstrong reveals. Out of 1,200 people examined, 12 per cent were infected. The ratio was as high as 60 per cent in some areas, he asserted.

The disease though rarely fatal is accompanied by excruciating pain, particularly headaches. The ailment has much the same symptoms as tuberculous meningitis (fever, headache, unresponsive reflexes and stiffening of the neck). This, Dr. Armstrong says, accounts for the fact that miraculous recoveries have often been reported in the tuberculous form, which is usually fatal.

Dr. Armstrong is well known for his work in combating the sleeping sickness epidemic that claimed scores of lives in the St. Louis area in 1933. In 1936 he developed an infantile paralysis "spray," proved to be 90 per cent effective, after experiments with the virus in monkeys.

D. C. Chemistss Meet Thursday At Maryland U.

D. C. Man Seized On Tip He Planned To Kidnap Girl

A 38-year-old Washington man was arrested yestreday following a cabman's tip that the former planned to kidnap a 13-year-old girl from the Home Industrial School, 2453 Wisconsin avenue northwest.

Two loaded pistols and two notes were found on the suspect, police said. One of the notes, they added, bore the forged signature of the school's superintendent, E. W. Cassie, ordering the girl's release; the other professed his love to the girl, and warned her against giving police any information.

The suspect confessed, according to police, to being out on bond on a charge of having abducted the girl. Police may call in the Federal Bureau of Investigation, they said.

Another Famous Train Steams in Tomorrow

'Union Pacific Special' Brings Many Stars; Recalls Other Hollywood Excursions to Capital; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

NOT SINCE the President's birthday celebrations will so many Hollywood celebrities have been in Washington at one time as will be here tomorrow, when the "Union Pacific Special" rolls into the Union Station at 1 p. m.

BELL

Aboard the train will be such popular stars of the cinema as George Raft, Glenda Farrell, Warren William, Marsha Hunt, Robert Preston, Brian Donlevy, Lynne Overman, Patricia Morison, William Henry, Evelyn Venable, Anthony Quinn, Sheila Darcy, Judith King, Luana Walters and Evelyn Luckey.

Coming to the National Capital from the world premiere of "Union Pacific" in Omaha, following stops in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, the train and its noted passengers will be Washington guests from 1 p. m. to late tomorrow evening—but no longer. The stars comprising the distinguished personnel of the entourage will make personal appearances on the stage of the Earle Theater tomorrow night at the 9 o'clock performance. "Union Pacific," Cecil B. DeMille's latest epic production for Paramount, will be the next attraction on the screen at the Earle.

The train itself will be on exhibition at Union Station during its stay here. Of historic interest, this "Iron Circus" includes a 70-year-old wood-burning engine, contrasted with a modern steam-electric turbine locomotive built to haul 12 cars at 125 miles per hour—which is some hauling in any man's language. One of the first passenger coaches ever built in the United States, an office car of the type used by Gen. Dodge in building the Union Pacific Railroad; a baggage car of the 70's, historic cars of other types and modern Pullmans make up the balance of the train.

The local drama desks, together with other representatives of the press, will journey to Baltimore—if that is a "journey"—tomorrow morning to ride in on this fabulous combination of the ancient and the modern in railroading and interview the stellar figures who are aboard. More of this later.

All this, of course, brings back to mind the other similar treks that have been made into the Capital by organized traveling units projected out of Hollywood. The most vivid in memory, needless to say, is the "Forty-Second Street Special"—which I boarded at 5 a. m., in Baltimore, when the only one awake on the train was Tom Mix's horse, Tony. Tony and I had a nice visit pending the time when Bette Davis, Glenda Farrell, Leo Carrillo, Tom Mix Joe E. Brown, Eleanor Holm, Lyle Talbot, Laura La Plante and all the rest of them should wake up. Then there was that "Moulin Rouge Caravan," of some years back, that was supposed to be an automobile junket. Unfortunately, a blizzard blew up at about the time we were to meet this caravanserie. The chorus girls, in their official motor cars, were lost in the Jersey wilds for hours, but we finally managed to catch up with a trainload of the stars somewhere between here and there. Among those stars, I remember, were Anna Q. Nilsson, Jack Mulhall, Ben Turpin, Roscoe Ates and a host of others. Senator McAdoo tendered them, and us, a luncheon in the Senate restaurant the next day. But it was a tough job getting them in here. More recently, there was that "Gold Diggers Air Special" that flew a flock of Hollywood beauties all over the United States, via American Air Lines, and never was a minute off schedule. Jeanne Madden was the star of that excursion. It was Jeanne Madden, you will remember, who played the ingenue lead with Walter Huston in "Knickerbocker Holiday."

And so, that's the way it goes.

Incidentally, to some of those riding the "Union Pacific Special," their arrival in Washington will be more or less in the nature of a "homecoming." Marsha Hunt, to all intents and purposes, is a Washingtonian. Her parents, I believe, still reside here. Lynne Overman hasn't been around for a good many years, but I would be willing to lay as high as 11 to 10 that he hasn't forgotten the days when he was a popular stock actor here. Glenda Farrell is only "coming back" under auspices similar to those which brought her here on that "Forty-second Street Special" on March 4, 1933, the day President Franklin Delano Roosevelt was inaugurated for the first time. It ought to be fun, meeting these good people all over again.

Now that the current theatrical season at the National Theater has come to a close, the local office of the Theater Guild and the American Theater Society of Washington, in the National, is being besieged with requests for reservations for the subscription season of six plays planned for the year 1939-40. None of the plays to be presented on subscription next season is available for announcement at this time. It is probable that one of the early bookings will be Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, in the repertoire of revivals they would have been presenting at the National this week, had not Mr. Lunt's physicians forbade him to play further until he had knocked out a bad attack of arthritis. Subscriptions, however, are being accepted by Bess Davis Schreiner from 12:15 to 5:30 p. m., in her office in the National. It seems to be, as one might say, up to you.

I am indebted to my fellow-Hoosier, Claude Watts, for the information that Deniston Wilson, one of the "Music Maids" with Bing Crosby in "East Side of Heaven," and with him in his radio broadcasts, is a Washington girl. Since I have known her father so well and so long, I should have known about it, but didn't.

Miss Wilson was born in this city and lived here until her parents moved to Paris some years ago. Her parents are Robert Forrest Wilson and Katherine Wilson. Bob came to Washington from Cleveland as a member of the United Press staff. He authored "Rich Brat," serialized by Woman's Home Companion, and, in collaboration with Manny Seff, "Blessed Event," the stage play that met with moderate success and then went on to fame and fortune as a motion picture. Bob and I had many a confab about "Blessed Event" before it had its premiere at the Belasco here, with Roger Pryor as star.

Denny Wilson grew up and was educated in Paris and speaks French like a native. This has made her an excellent foil for Bing Crosby on his broadcasts. She has done some work in stock on the West Coast, but gets her first big break with Crosby in his new film.

Here's the best of luck to her—and kindest regards to her folks.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, May 7.—"Grapes of Wrath," John Steinbeck's new novel, is probably the most controversial piece of fiction written in 19 years. Moreover, it bids fair to outsell any new book. Ever since our exclusive that Darryl Zanuck had paid $70,000 for the privilege of filming the hardships of the Joad family, letters have poured into Twentieth-Century-Fox saying that Zanuck had better not film the novel if he knows what's good for him.

LOUELLA PARSONS

This column, too, has received many letters saying Zanuck would never dare put such a story on the screen, even intimating that the New York Twentieth Century stockholders would object and insist on shelving the book. All I can say is these letter writers don't know Zanuck. He made "I'm a Fugitive" when he was warned against it. He loves a fight and he won't let a few letters deter him from showing a condition that actually prevails.

When New York's popular Mayor LaGuardia was in Hollywood a few months ago he was accompanied by his secretary, Byrnes MacDonald, who is the hero of a life story Warner Brothers will film. A graduate of Princeton Law School, MacDonald figured brilliantly as an assistant district attorney until political foes ousted him. Eventually becoming a member of the police force in a poor district, he was distressed at the fear the children had of the police. This led to the formation of "Pals," an organization to promote friendship between the kids and the cops. This group now has 277 recreation centers and is doing a fine work. When the story is screened Pat O'Brien will play the policemen with the "Dead End" kids as his converts. Others in the cast are Margaret Lindsay, Jeffrey Lynn and Fred Stone.

Having tasted first blood with "Confessions of a Nazi Spy," Warner Brothers have no intention of letting other companies step in and out-Nazi their Nazi movie. So they have bought for the sum of $15,000, "Underground Road," authorized by Edwin Justis Mayer and Oliver Garrett. Most of the transaction was handled by Eddie Mayer because Oliver was too busy being a bridegroom. He married only a few days ago and was away on his honeymoon when the deal was set. Anatole Litvak, whose direction of "Nazi Spy" rated such favorable comment, will megaphone Nazi opus No. 2 and soon.

Jascha Heifetz, who was scared to death about "acting" in "Music School" and who told Sam Goldwyn he wouldn't play any big moments, got a look at himself in the projection room and now he's changed his mind. Seems Jascha is not only good in the fiddle scenes, but he's not bad at all at emoting. Nothing to give Spencer Tracy or Paul Muni any bad moments—but anyway he's promised Sam that the minute he finishes a concert in Detroit over the weekend he'll be back here to do a week of extra dramatics. Entre nous, he's called off a long heralded concert in New York to put in his bid for next year's Academy Award.

Movita, who is sort of a minor league Dorothy Lamour, has been having the same sarong trouble. Up to date most of her pictures for Monogram have required sarongs or a few beads, but now Mrs. Jack Doyle is very pleased at the prospect of dressing up like a fashion model for "The Girl From Rio." Just as soon as her Irish thrush sails for Europe, Movita returns from Tia Juana to start work in this picture. Incidentally, Mongoram is whipping up a Spanish as well as an English version, which is just additional proof of the way the movies are courting South American markets these days.

Snapshots of Hollwood collected at random: Joan Crawford and Charlie Martin are no longer apart. As we thought, it was just a lovers' quarrel; Cobina Wright, jr., glamorous deb daughter of the well-known socialite, comes to Hollywood on an M-G-M contract; Twonsend Netcher beauing Muriel Campbell, of New York, hither and yon; Zorina's bridegroom, Balanchine, will have an acting part in her movie, "On Your Toes," as well as direct the "dawnces;" Ingrid Bergman, the new Swedish import, made her first Hollywood appearance at the David Selznicks' dinner Sunday night. David is really serious about not wanting too much publicity for her; George Raft has telephoned Virginia Peine several times since he went East and their friends are hoping they will both forget their nonsense when he returns; cute little Mary Frances Griffen got herself exposed to measles and had to be inoculated; her mother, Irene Dunne, wasn't told until she came home from the studio.

Florence Rice, who has wisdom tooth trouble, is expecting her dad, the W. K. sports writer, to visit her and her bridegroom, Robert Wilcox . . . The Lionel Atwills entertained at a farewell dinner for British Consul Evans and his wife, who have made many friends in Hollywood . . . Perc and Wally Westmore head for New York to show the gals how to make the most of their beauty . . . They'll use our Hollywood glamour girls as examples and visit colleges, shops and theaters to do their demonstrations . . . What a lot of chattering in Hungarian when Franciska Gaal and her husband entertained Baroness Lili Hatvany, Marta Eggerth and Jan Kiepura at Little Hungary. Doesn't look as if Hollywood is going to give Kiepura a tumble this time.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

JOHN BARRYMORE: Your mother-in-law is going to bring suit against you—for money she says you borrowed from her . . . Your wife will leave for Hollywood to move into your Hollywood home befre you get there . . Senator Bob Reynolds: John W. Davis is heading a committee of prominent attorneys who will pay the law-school tuition for refugee lawyers who had brilliant careers in other lands. Davis' group then will sponsor their admission to the New York bar . . . Margaret Mitchell: You should read the sizzling wire Marion Pierce of "I Must Love Someone" sent to Dave Selznick when, after inviting her to screen-test for the role of Belle Walting in "Gone With the Wind," he told Marion, who has had five husbands, that she's not the type.

POL. COM. VALENTINE: The Jersey police are aiding in the hunt for Joe Carbone, the $50-a-week cashier for Doubleday, Doran, who misappropriated almost $80,000 . . . One of the Jersey detectives assigned to the case drove to N. Y., spent three days here and returned with some contempt for Carbone's pursuers. "How will they find Carbone," he shrugged, "when here I go driving around Manhattan in a car with stolen license plates—and nobody's hep."

JAMES ROOSEVELT: When Sam Goldwyn, your employer, heard that you refused to broadcast in London for the B. B. C. unless you could phrase "Wuthering Heights," Sam beamed: "See?" It's amazing how much Jimmy has learned about the picture business already" . . . Katharine Cornell: Sam Behrman, author of your new play, "No Time for Comedy," will go to Johns Hopkins to have the doctors examine him . . .

J. EDGAR HOOVER: The newspapers reported htat two men this week broke into Lily Pons' home in Connecticut. Yesterday a third man tried it . . . Miss Pons won't prosecute them—although the first crasher had been sending her at least ten letters a week for five years. One year ago she had the postal authorities check on him and learned that he is his mother's sole support and that his arrest would prove a hardship on the elderly lady . . . Miss Pons' husband, Andre Kostelanetz, won't prosecute, either. 'After all," he explained, "the poor man has a psychosis about Lily. So have I. Only I'm luckier—she married me."

DRAMATIST GUILD: Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings, the Pulitzer prize winner, who is dramatizing her "South Moon Under" for Broadway production, tore up the completed play—because she wasn't satisfied with it . . . Leon Blum: Henri Bernstein, the playwright who is visiting here, confided that he had purchased the Ambassador Theater on the Champs Elysees and would reopen it in the fall with a new play he has written . . . Equity: The first perforcance of George White's new "Scandals" will be presented in Atlantic City June 29 . . . Norma Shearer: Noel Coward won't appear with you in the movie version of his "Tonight at 8:30." He's satisfied with the $80,000 he got for the screen rights.

CROWN PRINCE FREDRIK: Lauritz Melchoir invited Mayor LaGuradia to the party tendered in your hohor, but the mayor is very busy running the city, making official World's Fair welcomes and chasing after fire engines . . . He wired Melchoir: "How can a poor working man like me stay out all night when I have work to do the next day? Perhaps I'll be able to get a job at the Metropolitan Opera same day. Then I'll start attending midnight parties"

CORDELL HULL: Ambassador Joe Kennedy, who in three weeks spent the $4,800 allowed him by the United States Government for one year's entertainment, has no regrets about footing the reception bills himself. "Nice young men come to these receptions," explaind Knnedy, who has eligible daughters . . . Elaine Barrie: "My Dear Children," the show you quit, may close in Chicago next week. Despite all the publicity, there's no business.

TOM MOONEY: Frank P. Walsh, the attorney who won his fame when he defended you, met death this week in the way he would have wanted. "I want to die in the courtroom or on the way ot court," he nce told Morris Ernst. Walsh died in Foley Square—on his way to court.

NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER: Prof. Simkhovitch, of Barnard College, who is one of President Roosevelt's most intimate friends, was asked to list the prerequisites fo renrolling in his social science course . . . "There are none," he replied . . . "But we must list some prerequisites before our girls can take the course," a school official insistd . . . "Well, if you must list something," answered Prof. Simkhovitch, "list 'looks.'"

New 'Blondie' Comedy Opens On Met. Screen

'Blondie Meets Boss' Stars Penny Singleton And Arthur Lake

"BLONDIE MEETS THE BOSS." Columbia picturization of the comic strip by Chic Young, adapted to the screen by Richard Flournoy, with Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Larry Simms, Jonathan Hale, Danny Mummert, Dorothy Moore, Joe Conlin, Stanley Brown, Don Beddoe, Linda Winters, Dick Durrell, Jay Easton, David Newell, Mary Jane Carey and Daisy. Directed by Frank R. Strayer. Reviewed Sunday afternoon. At the Metropolitan Theater.

Add another to the list of picturized comic strip adventures with the return to the gelatines of Blondie, whose latest adventure, "Blondie Meets the Boss," opened yesterday afternoon at the Metropolitan.

Frankly lightweight comedy, relying on "gags" for its laughs, this sequel is a merry little piece, whose most endearing quality is its very unpretentiousness.

Surely, somewhere you've run across Mr. Young's homespun little family. Blondie, pretty and gingham-gowned, worries almost maternally over hubby, Dagwood Bumstead. And tall Dagwood is someone to worry over, with his hazy ways, his childish trust in other bipeds and his quality of shyness which makes him so common a denominator of everyday people, that his admirers are many. Baby Dumpling is their sharp-witted baby and Daisy their very superior dog.

Housekeeping and office trouble have long been the Bumstead's lot. In this film Dagwood, with a squaring of his shoulders, has resigned from Dither's office in a huff. Instead of her looked-for vacation Blondie is faced with no pay check or action. And old friends know that Blondie will take action. She drapes her apron around Dagwood, puts a broom in his hand, and takes over his job at the office. Then with the style of the comic strip, we watch all manner of things: A fishing trip, a night club, a jitterbug contest, an unexpected visitor and a break for the Bumsteads.

Many Aids to Comedy

All of it is tied together by two slick little figures, a baby, who speaks his mind, and a dog, with a sense of the ridiculous. Larry Simms is frank baby. He answers the telephone, advises a vacillating mother on infidelity and teaches Dad how to do the dishes. Daisy, the purp, shows up the jitterbugs, gets holy blazes from his absent mistress for talking over the telephone and raises his ears about as high as any dog ever has, even if he does get material aid.

Best of the film's gags is an all-inclusive catalogue of what goes on in Blondie's mind when she sees red. We won't tell, but it makes an occasionally slow pace the brisker for its introduction. Penny Singleton, of the innumerable blonde curls, is Blondie and with her thoroughly American accent makes the heroine of the funny sheets as real as Chic Young's drawings. Arthur Lake again is the harassed Dagwood and seems to have found a part to last him the rest of his life.

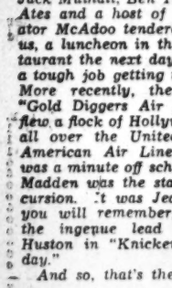
In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., May 7.—The quips flying around "The Women" set at Metro had all the sharpness of a machine gun, with blank cartridges. Rosalind Russell gets more implication in a look than most people do with a line. But her lines have an edge, too. When speaking of an ex-husband, she says: "That rat—I wouldn't trust him in Alcatraz."



HOPPER

Her dress stops traffic—three huge elongated eyes with fake eyelashes on the bodice and in the right places! Dress is two shades of purple, with carlet belt, a pancake hat with a mess of full-blown flowers, complete with eyeglasses and chewing gum. Sure, it's all part of "The Women."

John Fontaine is always addressed as Olivia de Havilland's sister by Director George Cukor, and Joan replies: "OK, Mr. Cukor, just wait till Vic Fleming takes us over." Joan looks like a page boy with military suit and bright silver buttons in "The Women."

Florence Nush is a lady novellist. When asked by Roz what she is, she says, "I'm the woman all men abhor—an old maid, just a frozen asset."

Guilaroff has done a swell hair job. Each head wears an original style. Roz does the old French twist up the back. Florence Nash's is cut short and brushed like a fan off the neck. Joan with a curled bang. Cukor, keeping in the mood, wore a bright red sweater.

And Joan Crawford won't catch up with "The Women" 'til next month!

People are wondering who Noccolai Yoshkin is. Denies he's a Russian prince. But since his performance as "The Man" (Joseph Goebbels) in the "Nazi Spy" picture, he's in demand for half a dozen big parts. He's a new kind of heavy, thin lipped, thin hipped, but with a menace like a two-edged sword. He's a talented painter, had a show at the Marie Sterner Gallery in New York last winter. His most striking portrait is of Marlene Dietrich. Turned down lead in the stage play fo "Wuthering Heights" for "Nazi Spy."

Edith Head, Paramount designer who's made clothes for our biggest stars, is having the time of her life, but not the kind you think. She's designing clothes for kids in "The Star Maker." Picture's in period and the skirts have to be more than a ruffle and the mothers are weeping and wailing, "But how can our babies get on in pictures if you cover up their dainty dimpled knees?"

Ran into Beulah Bondi "On Borrowed Time" set. "I feel like a members of the Barrymore family," she said. "I've been Lionel's wife three times and a mean relative twice."

"And just for that, I give you this," said Lionel, handing her a green apple. A great deal of the action in "On Borrowed Time" takes place in an apple tree which can shake, nod or stand still. They do say over there that only God and Gourbie can make a tree.

Alan Mowbray, one of the greatest kidders, was stopped in his tracks the other morning when he muffed a scene in "Way Down South." He walked over to a giant Negro in the scene and said, "I'll lay a left hook on you if I muff that again."

The man said, "You'll do what?" 'Twas then Alan discovered the man was the famous former heavyweight, John Lester Johnson!

Dance numbers devised by Dorothy Donahoe; staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by Art John, B. C. A. A.

We had good reason to forget the humid weather that paid the city a visit yesterday, as our weekly trek to Col. Lake's playhouse was in attendance upon a production that hit a new high in entertainment. The comedy was much better than usual; the featured women more stunning and talented, and the chorus presented some excellent dance routines.

Zonia DuVal, a dark-eyed lass, heads the distaff portion of the bill and we were exceptionally pleased to find that this fair miss had not only good looks but a pretty fair voice, as well. Miss DuVal offers several dance specialities which defy imitation, while her songs show evidence of careful selection and good taste in thier presentation.

The comdey angle of the attraction is intrusted to those two funny chaps, Joe Freed and Tiny Fuller. Both boys present novel and amusing comedy numbers that top anything we've heard here lately. Lew Petel, one of burlesque's best character and straight men, gives one of his best performances.

Blonde and charming Ina Thomas, the shapely Louise Rogers, and the clever acrobatic dancer, Janice, complete a roster of female beauties hard to match.

The "ladies of the ensemble" seldom get more than honorable mention in these columns, but credit earned is credit deserved, so a nice hand to Miss Dorothy Donahoe, who devised the numbers and another big hand for petite Pat Kelly, whose rendition of "Ole Man Mose" proves one of the highlights on an excellent bill.

Feller and Indians Beat Nats in Tenth, 8 to 7

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Cleveland, May 7.—As the Nats make their way around the West occasioning no very great respect, opinion is unanimous in one particular. It answers to the name of George Washington Case, and that young man is coming to be a personality to be reckoned with in American League ball games.

POVICH

At St. Louis, at Chicago and here today in Cleveland, fans have been gasping at the fleetness of the lad who is playing center field for the Washington club. Currently he is leading the league with his nine stolen bases and establishing himself as something of a Johnstown of the American League base paths.

Nine stolen bases at this stage of the season is probably some sort of a record in itself. Case is not even being extended for the honors, what with Joe Kuhel and Myril Hoag, his nearest rivals, boasting only four thefts each. But it is not as the pace-setter for stealing honors that Case is commanding attention and respect; it is as a continual threat whether he is on the bases or at the plate.

He has been no ball of fire at bat, with his .273 average, thus far, but his sheer speed stamps him a menace nevertheless. At Chicago he beat out a bunt down the third base line, and in the same game he pushed a bunt down the first base line and beat it out. Third basemen who play in close to protect themselves against his bunts are leaving themselves open for his hard drives down the line.

Three Classic Examples of Speed

Today, for instance, Case gave three classic examples of his speed. After drawing a walk, he took two bases on a single to center by Buddy Lewis. His dash for third succeeded, but it would have been foolhardy on the part of any other member of the Washington club. And then he stole home, literally flying down the base lines while Johnny Allen, an experienced pitcher, was holding the ball.

It was in the fourth inning, on a mere sacrifice bunt, that Case gave the finest illustration of his speed. With Leonard on first, Case laid a bunt down the third base line and was barely nipped at first base by a half step while Leonard moved to second.

"My gawd," ejaculated a Cleveland baseball writer. "Look at him fly. They know he's going to bunt, and the bunt is none too good, and he almost beats it out anyway. He's dynamite."

He is dynamite, too. Unless Case lines the ball into some infielder's glove, there is virtually no chance that he will hit into a double play. Batting behind slow-footed pitchers, Case has been doubled up only once this season, and that was on a hard drive to Crosetti, who took the ball near the bag in throwing position, stepped on the base and threw to first.

He's learned how to play centerfield, too, remarkable as that may seem. It should seem remarkable, because last year when Case was given the centerfield job, Washington fans saw one of the worst centerfielders in the history of Griffith Stadium. It was even money whether Case would catch a fly ball or get himself conked on the skull.

Harris Takes Him in Hand

He was as fleet then as now, but he was profaning his speed with poor judgment. He appeared to have few outfielding instincts and even his fleetness couldn't offset a half-dozen steps in the wrong direction before he got his bearings on a fly ball. And in the South this spring he was showing little improvement.

Finally, in desperation, Bucky Harris took the young man in hand. Harris told him he was misusing his speed, that with his fleetness he should be a great centerfielder.

"Break for every ball that's hit, I don't care where," said Harris. "Go and get it. I'm telling our right and left fielders to keep out of your way if they think you've got a chance to get there. Don't be afraid of bumping into those other fellows They'll give you plenty of room."

And it has worked out very nicely. Case, knowing he has plenty of territory to roam, is now invading leftfield and rightfield besides covering his own territory. And the catches he has been making have inspired him with a new sort of confidence. He is beginning to take on style and look very modish out there.

He's proving one of the best investments Clark Griffith ever made. In fact, he didn't cost the Washington club a dime, if you want the truth. Joe Cambria picked him up after Connie Mack turned him loose from a baseball school, with the warning that he'd never make a pitcher. What Connie Mack seemingly didn't surmise was that Case could be considerable of an outfielder.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, May 7.—Somewhere along about Altoona, on the way back from the Kentucky Derby, we encountered Nick Wall, the jockey who sat so fruitlessly astride El Chico in the big gallop at Churchill Downs. Mr. Wall was busily protecting his coffee from the combined ravages of a horseshoe bend and what was apparently a railroad engine afflicted with hiccoughs. But he wasn't too busy to talk about the big race.

CONSIDINE

"All I'm thankful for," Nick breathed, "is that Stout didn't whack Johnstown across the hips once during the whole race. Because if he had'a, Johnstown would have won that thing by a half a mile or so.

"I was going along real nice on El Chico, a few yards out of the box. In fact I was just sailing along and it looked like our plans would work out. You see we figured we didn't have much of a distance horse in El Chico, so what we were going to try to do was open up a big lead and kinda coast in. Well, so there we were, just sailing along on the rail, and doing all right, when all of a sudden something went past me so fast I still feel a draft on my right side.

"It was Johnstown, running like he was the best sprinter in the business. So I took after him and for maybe three-eighths of a mile I wasn't far behind. But El Chico was giving all he had and when I took a quick peek at Stout there was Stout actually pulling Johnstown in. He was only coasting along, and Chico—the fastest sprinter in the bunch—was going as fast as he could."

Johnstown Headed for Perfect Season

Wall is content that Johnstown won't be beaten this year. "He's a cinch for all the big ones, the Preakness, Belmont, Realization. I think he'll beat those older horses, too, like War Admiral, or, if he comes back, Seabiscuit. I'd say the only horse who can come close to him now is Gilded Knight. He's trained by Jim Fitzsimmons, too. And that's enough said, for Fitz is so far the best in the business that it's funny. He's another Hildreth."

Wall has been judging those big babies around the bends since 1927, a long time as jockeys go, but he can't remember any colt who improved more, during a single winter, than Johnstown. "We beat him every time we met him last year. We won eighty some thousand bucks with El Chico, as a 2-year-old, and the day he equaled that record at Saratoga I thought nobody would ever beat us. We would have won the Futurity, too, if we had been in it. In fact it looked like we'd never lose one, but sometime during the winter something happened to this Johnstown and it made him a great horse. It's something nobody can explain, outside of careful training, of course. It's like a ball player. One year he hits a lot more than the year before, and neither he nor nobody else knows just why."

Johnstown's victory just about convinced Wall that 2-year-old champions never will go on to be champions as 3-year-olds. "It's just different kind of racing. The 2-year-old races are short; they're built for sprinters. And sprinters win them and become champions, and nobody pays much attention to the 2-year-olds who are just beginning to run when the race is over.

He Couldn't Whip a Horse Like El Chico

"Yet, they're always the ones who come along the next year and win the big pots at the longer distances. But invariably you'll find that the 2-year-old champion—who wouldn't have been champion if he had any talent toward running a distance—becomes the winter book favorite for the Derby." Wall probably was thinking of the untold thousands of dollars bet on El Chico in the winter books. "The Kid" was an early favorite on the books.

When the Derby field came by the press box before it reached the first turn on Saturday it was El Chico, with Wall crouched low on his back, who was seemingly pressing the incomparable Johnstown. There was perhaps a length between them, but it had the appearance of a grim duel at that time. However, at the turn a wide raft of daylight began to show between them and when they bent into the beginning of the back stretch El Chico was lost in the anonymity of the pack that followed the leader. We asked Nick why he didn't use his whip to persuade his none-too-spirited charger to keep running.

"Listen," the young man counseled us, as he dexterously jockeyed his coffee cup to his lips, "El Chico's too nice a fellow to hit. Why, you could put a baby in his stall and he'd never never harm it. You'll never catch me beatin' that kinda horse."

George Case Steals Home in Second Inning Against Allen

Pete Appleton Blows Game by Uncorking Wild Pitch and Hitting Batter

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, Ohio, May 7.—The Nats required an extra inning today to collect their fourth straight defeat, succeeding eventually when, in the tenth, Pete Appleton gave a ball game back to the Indians.

He actually gave it back to the Indians, gave it to 'em by an 8-7 score, after the Nats had no less a personage than Bob Feller on the ropes. Against Feller who had made a late appearance in the game as Cleveland's trump card, the Nats had taken a 7-6 lead.

And then they entrusted the protection of that lead to Appleton. It was a dismal mistake. One of the first things Appleton did, after getting the first man out in the tenth was to pitch a two-bagger to Jeff Heath. Taft Wright juggled the ball a bit on the bounce, encouraging Heath, who had rounded first, to take an extra base, but it was a well-slapped ball.

Hits Batter

Appleton seemed to be off the spot when Keltner lifted a short fly for the second out, but from that point the veteran right-hander was a horrible liability to the Nats. The next thing he did was to hit Pinch-Hitter Bruce Campbell with a pitched ball to put the winning run on base and then he uncorked a wild pitch that moved Heath to third and Campbell to second.

Then, it is sad to relate, Appleton pitched a single to Pinch-Hitter Sammy Hale—a solid drive to centerfield—and the tying and winning runs clattered across the plate.

For the Nats generally, it was a very sad denouement. Back in the eighth inning they had knocked Relief Pitcher Johnny Humphries out of the box and continued the assault on Feller to shove two runs across the plate and tie the score.

Buck Newsom Halts Boston With 7 Hits; Slaps Double Himself In Second Inning

Three White Sox Hurlers Chased by Champs' Shelling; Two Home Runs Hit

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, May 7.—By losing the first of their last eight games to the St. Louis Browns, 6 to 3, today the Boston Red Sox were bumped down to second place behind the Yankees in the American League.

The initial loss for the Sox on this Western trip was administered by Buck Newsom, who scattered seven hits and struck out six batters for his second decision of the season. Elder Auker, who gave eight hits in six innings, was charged with the loss.

Newsom put himself in front in the second inning by smacking a double to rightfield with one on. The Browns fattened the advantage to 4 to 0 with three runs in the third on two singles, a double and two errors. Another error accounted for one of two runs in the seventh. A single and two successive doubles netted the Sox two scores in the eighth.

DiMaggio Visits Lou Nova's Camp

Nyack, N. Y., May 7 (INS).—Joe DiMaggio, crippled outfielder of the New York Yankees, and Joe Gould, manager of former Heavyweight Champion Jim Braddock and Tommy Farr, today paid a visit to Lou Nova's training camp at the Lakestown Country Club.

Both DiMaggio and Gould expressed surprise at Nova's sharp punching and accurate boxing as the Alameda contender went through two fast rounds with Jimmy Smith of the Bronx in preparation for his 15-round battle with Max Baer June 1 in Yankee Stadium.

Dodgers Beat Cards, 2-1, on Only 4 Hits

Babe Phelps' Pinch Single, Bases Loaded, Is Deciding Blow

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, May 7.—The Brooklyn Dodgers got only four hits today, but one was a pinch single by Babe Phelps with the bases loaded in the fourth inning and it gave them a 2-to-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals and second place in the National League.

All the Dodger blows were culled from the offerings of Rookie Bob Bowman, who was removed for a pinch hitter in the eighth, with Lon Warneke finishing.

Vito Tamulis allowed six hits in going the route for his first decision of the season and, except for the eighth when the Cardinals scored, was never in serious difficulty.

Lynn Myers, batting for Bowman, doubled and scored on Stu Martin's single to center. Afterward the Dodgers decided on the dangerous strategy of passing Joe Medwick with what might have been the win-

Muddy Track May Beat Johnstown in Preakness Saturday

Five to Seven Starters in Md. Classic

Jamestown Colt Missed Derby Mark Because He Lacked Stiff Competition

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

En Route to Pimlico, May 7.—Now that Johnstown has conducted his own "Gallop poll," which reveals the Nation 120 per cent in the opinion that he is a great horse, turf attention swings to the ancient and honorable Preakness to be conducted at Pimlico on Saturday.

At the Derby dinner last night, a Kentucky turf writer suggested that the Preakness be called off and that Johnstown be given a workout between the fifth and sixth races. This rib got under the skin of the Maryland writers, and, after a conference, we decided to adopt this slogan:

"Mud will save the Preakness."

Johnstown answered all questions as to his superiority over the Derby field yesterday. He might have broken the record had he been pressed. He simply galloped along after shaking off El Chico and went on to victory with long, smooth strides. That same action should carry him to triumph in the Baltimore classic.

"Unbeatable" on Fast Track

On a fast track, Johnstown now appears unbeatable, although the field must go around the race track before the winners can be declared. In the mud, or on any kind of an off track, there would be room for reasonable doubt as to Johnstown's ability. The same long stride that has served him so well in running up four notable triumphs this year would be against him on a sticky course.

However, some horsemen and jockeys contend that Johnstown can "mud it" and will prove "Professor Quizz" again, just as he did yesterday for the doubters of his ability to go a mile and a quarter.

With the Preakness a sixteenth of a mile shorter than the Derby, Johnstown seems to shape up as a lock proposition, despite the fact that he encounters some new opponents.

A check and recheck of the Preakness eligibles reveals only five horses which can be termed "sure" starters. One of them, of course, will be the Wheatley Stable's Gilded Knight and he will run coupled with Johnstown in the betting because "Sunny Jim" Fitzsimmons trains both.

Five to Seven Starters

"Sure" starters—Belair Stud's Johnstown, W. L. Brann's Challedon, Saratoga Stable's Volitant, Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's Impound, Wheatley Stable's Gilded Knight.

Doubtful starters—Joe W. Brown's T. M. Dorsett, John Hay Whitney's Heather Broom.

Very doubtful starters—Greentree Stable's Day Off, George D. Widener's Eight-Thirty.

It looks mighty like an even smaller field in the Preakness than in the Derby. From five to seven starters is the best guess even if the track becomes a sea of mud as it did last year when Dauber staged his runaway victory.

The "We Chase Johnstown Club" members will get their chances for various reasons. Gilded Knight and Volitant were not eligible for the Derby. Impound was scratched from the Derby to await his boss' race. Challedon had a mild excuse for not being closer to Johnstown and his second yesterday earned him a crack at the big money as well as that $10.000 second prize.

Impressive Colt

It is too bad for the Maryland Jockey Club's purpose that Gilded Knight has to be bet along with Johnstown. The Sir Galahad 3d colt was an impressive winner in New York before moving to Maryland to whip the Chesapeake Stakes field. Despite the opinion around the Fitzsimmons barn that "Johnstown can beat Gilded Knight doing anything," the latter appears to be the chief contender in the line-up.

Impound couldn't get close to either Gilded Knight in the Chesapeake or Johnstown in the Wood Memorial, but like Challedon, he has shown good closing ability and owners and trainers are reluctant to give up on a colt that is not a quitter.

The appearance of Ciencia in the race Saturday would help. The hard-running daughter of Cohort scored a notable victory in the $50.000 added Santa Anita Derby last winter. She is sturdy and can go a route. However, the slight injury that kept her out of last Saturday's Pimlico Oaks may force her to be scratched. If she goes, she may be handicapped by having been away from racing too long.

Must Improve

Volitant must improve a lot off his Wood Memorial effort to give Johnstown much trouble. However, he is owned by George Bull, a man who wants to see what his colt can do and will put up the necessary cash to be shown.

The shipping of Heather Broom to New York today, along with El Chico, seems to indicate that, despite the fact the son of The Porter was third yesterday, Trainer Earl Sande realizes the futility of trying to hold back the Johnstown flood of 1939.

T. M. Dorsett traveled toward Pimlico tonight in the same car with Johnstown, which is about as close as he will get to the Belair buzzard again. While his handlers said they were undecided about starting him in the Preakness, it is believed he shipped along with Johnstown to cut his freight cost.

W. L. Brann's Challedon, accompanied by a lead pony, is riding in a boxcar behind the locomotive that is chugging as this is written. Challedon, like Johnstown, came out of the Derby in good shape.

On Saturday, he will meet Johnstown on the home grounds. While the Jamestown colt left the Maryland hope far up the race track yesterday, some horsemen have a feeling that Challedon is going to be much closer in the Preakness.

King of the 3-Year-Olds Wears His Crown

The morning after a smashing victory in the Kentucky Derby brought this crown for Johnstown from his handlers. Here is James Dunnigan, who guarded Johnstown during the past few weeks at Churchill Downs, affixing the homemade crown of paper. Turf fans know Johnstown as the 3-year-old champion but his handlers know him as a playful pet as well

Bucs Defeat Bees Behind Klinger, 9-2

Six-Hit Pitching Plus Late Attack Wins Series Opener

By the Associated Press.

Boston, May 7.—Pittsburgh batting power broke out with a vengeance in the closing innings today, and the Pirates waltzed to a 9-to-2 triumph over the Boston Bees in their series opener. Bob Klinger pitched six-hit ball to hand the Bees their fourth straight setback.

It was a close ball game until the ninth. The Bees hopped off to a 1-0 lead in the third, when Garms singled home Lopez, who had walked and had been sacrificed to second. The Pirates took command in the sixth, however, with three runs—two of them being scored on Suhr's single with the bases full—and then added another in the eighth and 5 in the ninth.

Bowstrom Beats Veterans, 6 to 2

Bob Bowstrom, a newcomer to the local softball tangle, won his second Sports Center League game of the season yesterday for the Golub's Market ten when he pitched six-hit ball to beat "Tarzan" Webb and the Irish War Veteran team, 6 to 2. The Vets took a lead at the start but were unable to hold it as Market batters warmed up and Bowstrom's slants became more puzzling.

Plaza Wine, one of the Sports Center favorites, continued its impressive march with a 14-5 triumph over American Linen, the latter being shut out for the first six sessions. Washington Shade fell before Land o' Lakes, 19 to 9, though it held a 9-4 advantage in the fifth period.

At Gonzaga Field, in the Sunday morning section of the league, Standard Linen featured the four games played when it trounced Philipino Center, 23-3. In other games S. Kann's Sons defeated Garvin's Grill, 10 to 8; Arcade Laundry defeated Giant Food, 8 to 5, and Call Radio defeated No. 6 Precinct, 11 to 3.

Scatters Nine Hits as Mates Get 14 for 22 Bases; Bengals Drop

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, May 7.—The Philadelphia Athletics hammered out 14 hits for 22 bases today to defeat the Detroit Tigers, 10 to 3, and shove the Bengals into seventh place in the American League standings. George Caster went the route for the A's and allowed nine scattered blows in administering Detroit's sixth consecutive defeat.

Earle Brucker's homer with the bases full in the fifth inning decided the game in favor of the Mackmen. The blow was made off Alton Benton, starting Detroit pitcher, who was followed to the hill by Archie McKain, George Coffman and Japhet Lynn.

Dear Al:

Chief topic around the track yesterday morning was Impound's workout. The Vanderbilt-owned Preakness candidate was on the track very early and with Jockey (Skinny) Fallon in the saddle was sent a mile and an eighth. The son of Sun Beau—Embargo Arts moved nicely throughout and was caught for the distance in 1:54 3-5. His fractional time were 0:36, 0:48 2-5, 1:14 2-5, 1:27, 1:41 2-5. Heelfly, regarded as the choice for the Dixie Handicap next Wednesday, also from the Vanderbilt barns, worked an easy mile yesterday morning in preparation for Wednesday's engagement. He was timed at 0:55, 1:20, 1:45 3-5. Bull Lea, Widener Cup winner and one of the principal contenders for first honors in the Dixie, was sent five eighths of a mile in preparation for a longer and stiffer trial Sunday. He was caught at 1:02 2-5 and finished out the six furlongs in 1:16. Millsdale Stable's Sun Lover, a likely starter in the $2,500 Survivor Stakes tomorrow, was sent a mile by Trainer Pelleteri. With Charlie Stevenson in the saddle the colt was clocked in the following times, 0:24 2-5, 0:36 2-5, 0:49 2-5, 1:02, 1:15, 1:28 2-5, and 1:42 4-5. Two prominent Preakness candidates are due in from New York over the week-end. They are Wheatley Stable's Gilded Knight and Greentree Stable's Day Off. Saratoga Stable's Volitant, another candidate is expected early in the week. The presence of these three at the Old Hilltop course together with Impound will constitute the quartet which is expected to furnish the chief opposition to the Kentucky Derby winner, should that horse go postward in the Preakness. Imprudent, winner of the Masquerader Stakes here last Thursday and victor in seven out of eight starts, is one of the bargain yearlings of 1938. The filly was purchased by Mrs. Ella K. Bryson for $550 and her earnings have amounted to $9,830. Her next start will be in the Pimlico Nursery here Friday. Calumet Dick, winner of the 1937 Dixie Handicap and the Narragansett Special in which he defeated Seabiscuit and Snark, broke down badly yesterday morning. The Bryson gelding had been on the comeback trail but will now be retired to Elray farm at Kingsville, Md. BILL.

First race—Lisco, bearing the colors of the Calumet Farm, was outclassed in allowance races at Keeneland but runs with a claiming tag today. Has the class; may be the right one. Humgood gets a good figure off his race behind Stepinfred. Hasn't much to beat in the others. Refreshing, a first-time starter, should show.

Second race—Burner displayed good speed but was short when third to General Mowlee in his first outing this year at Havre. He meets cheaper competition here and should win. Cackle Time turned in an even effort behind Many Mor, is lightly weighted and figures best for place. Maewhisk has won in this company and is dangerous.

Third race—Silevereigh fell in his one start this year but has performed well with better-grade platers in the steeplechase field. Has the edge in this maiden event. Trolight was well placed behind Angus when he fell on the next to the last fence. The one to beat. Lateral Pass makes his first start in some time but should better the others.

Fourth race—Snobbish Lady showed speed running with Stepinfred last outing. She raced well at Bowie and meets a field of cheap maidens here. Aster Lady indicates she is on edge from her last race and figures as the runner-up. Baby Lamb failed to register at Keeneland but merits a chance in this company.

Fifth Race—Blazing Heat was second to Affair at Havre and displayed good efforts with older horses this spring. Is well placed today, lightly weighted, and gets high rating. Suzanne Peck was no match for Sure Miss, running for allowances Friday but should redeem that poor effort. Balloter is the class but may need a race.

Sixth race—Sun Egret figures to reverse the decision Old Rosebush scored upon him last week. Sun Egret suffered interference in the early running of that event and was closing well at the finish. Old Rosebush picks up five pounds off last winning effort. Salamis, second to Fighting Fox in New York, should show.

Seventh race—Spartan Lady has shown fair efforts with slightly better horses and gets the call here. She is the class of the field and moves up on off tracks. Chase Him, third to Match Point yesterday, will be the one to beat. Playmore won his last but didn't beat much.

Eighth race—Lady Democrat, second in her last two starts and a winner twice on the local circuit, stands out as the best bet of the day. She gets a break in the weights and likes any kind of track. Scarlet O is improving with racing and will be ready for his best. Turkish Brand is cheap but is in form and should take the small award.

Best bet—Lady Democrat.

The Brighter Side

By Damon Runyon

Our old man used to say that he guessed the percentage of scoundrels was less among doctors than any other class of men, professional or otherwise, in the world. He said that in his whole life he had never encountered more than two or three doctors who were out-and-out bad 'uns.

RUNYON

Our old man said that whenever his faith in humanity commenced to falter, he just contemplated the character and works of the doctors he knew and that bolstered him up right away. He said that whenever he passed certain doctors in our old home town, of Pueblo, he felt like taking off his hat as a mark of respect to them, only that action would have embarrassed the doctors.

Our old man said people took doctors too much for granted. He said if a fellow jumped into a river and, at no great risk to himself, rescued a drowning man or woman, the papers made a big noise about the incident and pronounced the rescuer a hero. Maybe he even got a medal or some other token of his bravery, but our old man said the very same day some doctor might save the lives of half a dozen people by his skill and devotion, and you never heard of the matter.

Little Credit

Our old man said you might read stories in the papers every day over quite a period about the fight some prominent man or woman was making for life against illness, and about how, eventually, they won out. But he said you never read anything about some doctor's part in that battle. He said you never read how the doctor sat there day and night struggling for the patient's life even when the task seemed hopeless.

He said you would think from what the papers said that the patient's own fortitude was responsible for defeating death rather than the skill of the doctor. He said a lot of patients generally thought pretty much the same way after they got well, especially when the doctor's bill came in.

Our old man said it was astonishing how little credit a patient whose life had been saved was willing to give the doctor after he got the bill. He said any person at death's door would always be glad to give all they possessed to live awhile longer, even though their possessions amounted to millions, but after some doctor pulled them back from the dark abyss and they got to walking around again, they were not willing to pay even a minute percentage of their holdings.

Our old man said he never could understand why most people seemed to feel that the doctor's bill was the very last they were obligated to pay. He said his own life had been saved several times by doctors and that he always paid the doctor first and let the other debts incurred during his illness wait. He said he figured that had the doctor not saved him and put him in action again, the others would never have been paid anyway.

Our old man said he knew fellows there in our old home town of Pueblo who always kept their doctor waiting for months and even years for his money while in the meantime they lived high themselves and entertained and wore good clothes. He said that these fellows, even while indebted to the doctor, had no compunctions of conscience about calling him again in case of illness.

He said the amazing thing was he had never known a doctor who would not always respond to a call, even when he knew he was not going to get paid. Our old man said everybody always seemed surprised when a doctor died, but he guessed nobody figured that maybe his health might have been undermined by getting out of bed at all hours of the night in all kinds of weather and losing sleep in long vigils at desperate bedsides.

Physical Stress

He said he guessed that nobody figured that the strain on a doctor's nerves and mind, as well as his body, might affect him the same as it would other mortals. He said that it was constantly a wonder to him that doctors lived as long as they did when you considered the work they had to do.

Our old man said he had known doctors who should have been in hospital beds themselves to get up and go out in snowstorms on calls that they knew would not yield a dime for their services and might, indeed, be a personal expense to them for medicines, or fuel, or even food.

He said it was rarely you heard of a doctor demanding that a patient in physical stress lay a little something on the line in advance. He said that was why he always cheered when he heard of some man of means handing over a right royal fee to a doctor in gratitude for services rendered. He said whatever a doctor got it was seldom enough.

Our old man said a doctor's patients expected him to dress neatly, to have a neat office and nice tools and to be of tranquil, reassuring mood and manner and of steady, gentle hand. But he said how in the dickens could he have those things and be that way if the patients did not pay their bills and the doctor had to always be worrying about his own debts?

He said doctors should have peace of mind more than any other persons in this world to properly discharge their functions, and he thought there ought to be some kind of law to make this possible.

Rippy, Olmsted Star in 4-Ball Matches at Indian Spring

Ralph Jones Scores Ace in Manor Play

George Diffenbaugh, Rut Coffey Win Pro Match at Army Navy; Publinks Teams Tie; Woodmont, Columbia Open Cards

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

The 32 best two-man golf teams in Maryland and the District battled it out in first round matches of the second annual Maryland State Golf Association four-ball tournament yesterday at Indian Spring, with nine local duos and seven Baltimore twosomes advancing after an afternoon of fast scoring.

With eleven No. 1 teams marching into the second round compared to only five No. 2 teams, the hosts, Manor, Congressional, Hillendale and Rolling Road sent both combinations, while five clubs were eliminated, Kenwood, Argyle, Sparrows Point, Woodholme and Suburban.

The second team of Indian Spring Club, Jock Olmsted and Claude Rippy, had a best ball of 65, six strokes under par, with Olmsted going out in 31 and Rippy helping a stroke for a 30. With Rippy the mainstay on the back nine with a 37, they had a 34 best ball. Sparrows Point's top team of A. W. Reid and Dave Womer lost 8 and 7.

Buddy Sharkey and Roger Peacock, top team of the hosts and the pretourney favorites, were well under par featured by Peacock's outgoing 32 as they defeated Johns Hoffman and Barris Jones, Baltimore C. C., No. 2, on the sixteenth green.

Beaver Dam's second duo of Everett Johnson and Forest Thompson were apparently about to pull the biggest upset of a day marked by the advance of virtually every favored pair when they led State and Middle Atlantic champion Otto Greiner and his partner Ed Stinebert, of Rodgers Forge two up at the ninth. But Greiner turned on the steam on the next nine, was back in 33 and his team won four straight holes and the match two and one.

With defending champions, Elliott Spicer and Leroy Sasscer breaking up the 1938 combination, Sasscer paired with Johnny Bergelin, of Kenwood and lost to Hillendale's youngsters, Paul Hampshire and Johnny Farrell, two and one.

Congressional No. 1 (Earl McAleer and Louis Fuchs) defeated Sparrows Point No. 2 (J. R. Buell and C. R. Beck), 4 and 3.

Bonnie View No. 1 (Grant and Miller) defeated Argyle No. 2 (Nolan, Gibson and William Flannery), 4 and 3.

Rodgers Forge No. 1 (Otto Greiner and and Edward Stinebert) defeated Beaver Dam No. 2 (E. Johnson and Forest Thompson), 2 and 1.

Indian Spring No. 1 (Roger Peacock and Buddy Sharkey) defeated Baltimore C. C. No. 2 (John J. Hoffman and Harris E. Jones), 3 and 2.

Hillendale No. 1 (Jess Dowling, jr., and Robert E. Jones) defeated Columbia No. 2 (Earl Skinker and B. Young), 4 and 3.

Manor No. 2 (Max Taylor and Dick Meyer) defeated Woodholme No. 1 (Al London and John Leidy), 7 and 5.

Indian Spring No. 2 (Claude Rippy and Jock Olmsted) defeated Sparrows Point No. 1 (A .W. Reid and Dave Womer), 8 and 7.

Congressional No. 2 (F. J. Winkler and L. Holland) defeated Suburban No. 1 (Nathan Kaufman, jr., and M. Halle), 3 and 2.

Baltimore C. C. No. 1 (W. G. Eager and Edlar Lucas) defeated Capital No. 2 (Frank White and Bill Pendergast), 6 and 4.

Manor No. 1 (Harry Pitt and Tommy Bones) won by default over Bonnie View No. 2.)

ARMY AND NAVY

George Diffenbaugh, Kenwood pro, and Rut Coffey, Winchester, Va., mentor, packed a lot of good golf into 18 holes at Army and Navy to hand the host club pros, Allan and Danny Burton, a defeat on the last hole, 1 up.

Several hundred Service Club golf fans watched their pros lose three of the first five holes to the visitors, a short but powerful combination, trial 4 holes with six to play and then rally to take the match to the final green.

Danny Burton birdied the thirteenth to cut the margin to 3 down, clipped another off the lead with an eagle on the fifteenth and putted for another eagle on 16, winning the second par five hole in a row with a birdie, and then Allan halved the final two holes in pars after making bold stabs for the birdies.

Although no official scores were kept, the totals were about even, with Coffey the individual star while Diffenbaugh added to the early lead after a shaky start. The hosts were about even.

J. S. Gregg, a 23 handicap member, advanced to the final round of the spring handicap match play tournament and will meet the winner of the W. S. Popham-A. H. Yando tilt for the title.

EAST POTOMAC

The "grudge" team match between the city's rival public links courses, East Potomac and Rock Creek, ended in a 6-6 tie yesterday over the former layout, with the hosts sweeping the first two matches and the visitors taking six points in the last two.

Mel Shorey, East Potomac pro, and Tommy Doerer, manager, easily defeated Al Price, Rock Creek mentor, and City Muny Champ Andy Oliveri, with Shorey posting an unofficial mark of 71. After Loving and Wilson blanked Holmes and Graham in the second match, the youngsters from the uptown course had their own way in the other foursomes. Several of the hosts top players were playing in Richmond, and the return match at Rock Creek should prove more of a test.

The match was to be the cause for heavy wagering, but the total wouldn't pay the carfare between the courses.

East Potomac, 6; Rock Creek, 6

Match Play Tourney

Joe Micker defeated Gus Kupka, 7 and 6; W. Lines defeated Dutch Rittenhouse, by default; Melvin Skaggs defeated L. Byers, 5 and 4; Jimmy Gipe defeated Jack Harris, 2 and 1; George Graham defeated J. Blair, 6 and 5; Gerald Edwards defeated Joe Wilson, 1 up, 19 holes; Gene Possum defeated A. V. Cross, 5 and 4; Theodore King defeated Ken Hayes, 3 and 2.

WOODMONT

Howard Nordlinger, one of Woodmont's top golfers over a period of years, was low man as Leopold V. Freudberg's golf committee staged opening day with a handicap tourney and mixed scotch foursome. Nordlinger had low gross with a 79, winning over Jerry Brode, who needed two pars for a 76 and finished 6-6, 5 over, for an 81. Al Schneider had 86.

Willard Goldheim and Jack Schulman had net 74's to tie for first in the handicap play, while four tied for third, Gerald Grosner, H. J. Friedman, Ellis Block and Leo Schlossberg. L. Gressberg with 71 was also among the prize-winners. Phil Dieskin and Al Steinem were nine-hole bogey winners with 38 and 37, respectively.

Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Harris and Mr. and Mrs. Gus Ring tied with net 38's in the mixed scotch foursome blind bogey event, while Dr. and Mrs. Milton Harris, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Stephens and Maurice Isemann and Bertha Israel all had 39's. The 41's of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Jaffe and Mr. and Mrs. Edward K. Melnicker were also among the prize-winners. Al Steinem and Mrs. Jack Schulman had low gross in the mixed play.

MANOR

A hole in one by Ralph E. Jones featured the day's play at Manor as the dogwood blossom tournament opened the club card. Jones, playing with Ray Coontz, J. B. Matre and M. O'Hanlon, hit a tee shot on the 151-yard eighth hole that dropped short of the cup and plunked in for his greatest thrill in 15 years of play at the Beck Club.

R. Spriggs won the R. T. Edwards trophy in the dogwood blossom play with 81-14, 67, a stroke ahead of G. F. Beyer, 80-12,68. Three tied with 69's. H. W. Talkey, 96-27, 69; E. W. McLerren, 81-12, 69, and T. A. Alber, 83-14, 69.

COLUMBIA

Three teams tied with net 62s to officially open the club tournament season at Columbia with a record-breaking crowd competing in the varied events on "opening day."

Col. J. H. Bryan and Gen. H. H. Arnold had a best ball of two strokes over par—72—and deducted a 10 handicap for a 62, while E. E. Krewson and Melvin Sharpe had 74-12—62, and Maj. J. M. Epperly and H. S. Bursley had 79-17—62.

Maury Nee poked the longest tee shot up the eighteenth hole to win the driving contest, while G. M. Ferris was second, and J. Raymond Hoover won the approaching contest with Francis Kane second.

KENWOOD

R. G. Peebles won the Donal Chamberlin Trophy at Kenwood with a 36-hole net score of 140. Peebles had an 80 on his first round, minus an 8 handicap for a net 72 and played the course in 76, six strokes over perfect figures the next trip and had at net 66.

Charles Walson was second with 162-19—143, while two tied for third, Carlton D. Smith, 168-24—144, and J. W. Harvey, 163-19—144.

CONGRESSIONAL

D. E. Naylor won the sweepstakes tournament at Congressional with an 86-19, 67, while George DeWitt, Maryland U. court star, and Loy Anderson tied for second with 69's, each with 81-12, 69. Four others tied with 70, C. H. Giroux, 88-18, 70; F. E. Berquist, 81-11, 70; J. M. Price, 82-12, 70, and J. M. Straight, 79-9, 70.

Wiffy Cox, club pro, who plays with Jimmy Thomson against Ralph Guldahl and Sammy Snead May 21 at Congressional, showed he was near the top of his game by bagging six birdies in a careless round of 71. Cox and Dam Moorman won, 3 apd 2, over his assistant, Warner Gray, and George DeWitt.

ARGYLE

Phil Buscher and R. Jewell paced the team ladder qualifications at Argyle with 36-hole totals of 155, with one more week left in the twin medal rounds. Buscher had 79-76 and Jewell 74-81.

R. W. Mess scored five birdies in a round of 75, and needs a 79 or better to take the lead, while several other players are still in the running for the top post, including W. L. Moore, 77; Willie Fox and Fritz Williams, 80.

CAPITAL

H. L. Gray scored six threes in an 18-hole round at Capital, the highest number of treys in a 3, 4, 5, 6 tournament at any club this year, to easily win his class. Three tied for the most fours, Ken Spencer, J. H. Carpenter and George McDonald, with 10 each, while N. E. Rogers, sr., had 14 fives in a con-

Paul Hangs Up Third Straight Victory as Loop Leading Reds Win

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, May 7.—Big Paul Derringer chalked up his third straight win today as the first place Cincinnati Reds pounded out an easy 13 to 4 victory over the Phillies before 18,046 at Shibe Park.

Except for the fifth inning, when the Phils bunched three of their nine hits for three runs, Derringer was never in danger and coasted to victory behind the slugging of Frank McCormick, Ival Goodman and Harry Craft, who between them drove in 11 of the Reds' tallies.

Craft smashed one of Hugh Mulcahy's pitches into the leftfield stands for a homer with two on in the first to send the Reds off to a flying start.

Catholic University Gives Carvelas Highest Honor

Football Player, Engineering School Student Awarded Harris Cup at Athletic Dinner

By Jack Munhall.

For the second time in three years a Washington born and raised boy was awarded the highest honor conferred on a student by Catholic University last night as outstanding civic and sports figures gathered at Shoreham Hotel for the sixth annual Cardinals' athletic dinner.

In testimony of his singular ability as a gentleman, scholar and athlete John Carvelas, former Eastern High football star, was awarded the Harris Cup which Bernie Lieb, also a graduate of Eastern and a local boy, received in 1937.

The presentation was made to Carvelas, a guard on the Catholic University eleven and a student of the Engineering School, by Ambrose O'Connelly, Assistant Postmaster General of the United States.

Burke Vidnovic, all-District halfback and for three years a great punter and passer for C. U. elevens, was named the most valuable player of last year and was rewarded with a trophy by A. J. (Dutch) Bergman, director of athletics.

Judge Edward M. Curran of the District Court was toastmaster.

Six departing C. U. seniors were awarded "C" certificates. They were Wayne Ambrose, football and basketball; Vidnovic; John Kasunich, end captain of the 1937-38 eleven; William Gearon, boxing; Walter Castanguay, basketball; Frank Cairo, football and track; Carvelas and Francis (Scoops) Kerran, manager of football and basketball.

Among the guests of honor were the Rev. Dr. Maurice S. Sheehy, the Very Rev. Dr. Ignatius Smith, the Rev. Patrick O'Connor, J. Sefton Darr, president, District Bas Association; Frank Dobson, head football coach at the University of Maryland; Max Farrington, director of athletics at George Washington University; Jack Hagerty, head football coach at Georgetown, and Eddie LaFond, boxing coach at Catholic University.

Frederick Beats Old Milwaukee

Frederick ,Md., May 7.—A triple to the leftfield fence with the bases loaded by Pinch Hitter Frank Fraley brought the Frederick Hustlers from behind to defeat the Old Milwaukee Brewers, of Washington, before a large crowd here today, 7 to 6.

The Hustlers, playing with a makeshift infield, presented the Brewers with three runs in the fourth and were hard pressed to catch the visitors until they got to Joe Silverman in the sixth for four runs.

Giants Slam 16 Hits, Rout Cubs, 10 to 3

Melton Credited With First Victory; Ott Batting Star

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 7.—The busy bats of the New York Giants collected 16 hits good for 25 total bases off Clay Bryant today and crushed the Chicago Cubs, 10 to 3.

Cliff Melton, who had been routed in two previous starts and unimpressive in an equal number of relief calls, went the route for New York with a commendable six-hit performance.

Only two of the runs scored against him were earned and one of these was Manager Gabby Hartnett's second homer in as many days. It came with none on base in the seventh inning after the Giants had settled the issue.

Mel Ott, with four hits, including a triple and a double, was the batting star and knocked in three of the winners' runs besides scoring three himself.

Kan Doo Wins Honors In Potomac Sailing

Cricket II More Than 2 Minutes Astern in Morning Race; Frolic Wins Honors in Comet Races

By Bob Knight

Local sailing skippers found slight respite from the heat yesterday and very little wind as warm weather brought 35 of them out on the Hains Point course for the Potomac River Sailing Association's double-header.

In the morning race, which got under way at 10:30, the sailors had difficulty finding the vagrant catspaws which blew over the course, but Dr. Albert E. Pagan's 20-footer Kan Doo caught enough of the gentle sou'wester to take top honors, leaving H. C. Bush's Cricket II more than 2 minutes astern. Former International Star Class Champion Judge Prentice Edrington continued his winning streak in the hard luck division to bring the revamped Lady Avon home last in both morning and afternoon events.

William White, of the Capital Yacht Club, celebrated the organization's "opening day" by scuttling a ten-boat comet fleet in both races. The veteran comet skipper piloted his 16-foot Frolic home almost 2 minutes ahead of the field in the morning engagement and sunk the comiteers by better than 5 minutes in the afternoon to win in the fast time of 1:23:21.

Reid A. Dunn's Rebel annexed the Snipe Class honors in both races, putting Dr. Evart Warren's High Lama in second place. George Wilcox's Hardtack was third and Paul Tremarne's Ho Mum fourth. It was Dunn's day as the Snipes flew in formation in both events, with the exception that slightly faster times were scored in the afternoon as the breeze piped up.

Black Cat, Dr. Ralph W. Barnhardt's fast, scrappy cat, had a succesful day, winning both races for the Class B handicappers. Miss Louise Kline sent her 14-foot Swan over the line to take top honors in the morning event, but the veteran feminine skipper had the misfortune to ram the committee boat in the afternoon. The committee promptly disqualified her.

In Class C, Bill Preston's fast little "B" dinghy Jezebel received the firt steback in a horetofore successful career when Vincent Oliver's Blue Streak took morning honors and Fancy Pants, of the Ayre's Stable, won in the afternoon. Jezebel had her sails pinned back by Lucky Duck and Fancy Pants in the first race and by Fred Tilp's Sizzle and Bob Cochran's Flighty in the second to receive an ignominious fourth.

After having its share of frenzied slide rule work during the heat of both races, the humid race committee remained on the course aboard Jack Marsh's yawl Ranger, stewing over the results while the fleet retired to Capital Yacht Club to celebrate that organization's forty-seventh birthday. Mr. Marsh's only comment was that it was hot.

Michigan Park Wins League Game, 7 to 5

Merchants Rally to Beat Naimans in Crescent Competition

Though out-hit, 12-8, Michigan Park Merchants won their Capitol Crescent League battle with Naiman's Photographers yesterday, 7 to 5, after coming from behind. Naimans took a four-run lead in the first three-and-a-half innings, but a five-run rally of the Merchants in their half of the fourth wiped that out. The Photo boys vainly attempted to overcome Brookland's 7-4 lead in the ninth, but the best they could do was one run.

Fort Bayard nine, after holding an 8-to-0 lead at the first of their game with Fogelman Radio, managed to get only a 15-to-11 victory. It was a free-swinging affair, featured by the home-run duel between Tait, of Fort Bayard, and Hitte, of the Radio Club. Each got two.

In the other two league games yesterday, Brooklyn Orioles came from behind to whip Ida's Department Store, 6 to 4, and Woodridge A. C. barely nosed out Shankman Market, 8 to 7.

Barbieri Blanks Cathedral, 7 to 0

A 7-0 shutout was registered yesterday by Pitcher Barbieri, of Costello Post, as his American Legion League team beat National Cathedral on the Ellipse. Barbieri allowed only five hits, while his teammates registered 17 safeties off the slants of Nunnally and Smith, of Cathedral.

Police nine, of the American Legion, suffered an 11-10 defeat at the hands of Cooley McCullough in another league game. It was a slugfest that lasted only five innings, and Nichols and DeCelle hurled for the winners. Coppage, of the Police Boys, had the best hit of the clash, a triple.

ACKERMAN

Anglers in this section decry the lack of real trout waters, and the closed season which arrives simultaneously with vacation days. They need not, for less than a full day's drive is a section comparable to any in the northern woods. Big water—and fast. With lurking trout waiting to give even the best of anglers a real battle. What is most important, the season is open until September 1.

This section of big woods and waters is in western North Carolina, and is made up of six State-Federal game refuges and the Nantahala and Pisgah National forests. The 230 miles of trout stream within their confines have been heavily stocked and protected for several years. In addition there are many native fish that would justify a far longer trip.

Guide Advisable

Various sections of these streams will be open a few days each month. In addition to the North Carolina State license an extra fee of $1 a day is required, but this can hardly be counted in view of the really worthwhile fishing.

In some of the areas it is more than advisable to have a guide. In the others game protectors accompany the parties, which are limited to a certain number. The refuges in which the streams will be open and the dates on which fishing will be allowed are: Mount Michell and Daniel Boone; May 6-7, 18-19; June 3-4, 21-22; July 3-4, 15-16 and August 5-6. Sherwood Forest: May 12-13-14; July 2-3-4 and August 4-5-6. Fires Creek and Standing Indian: May 18-19-20; July 3-4-5 and August 10-11-12. Wayah Bald: May 29-30, June 23-24 and July 28-29.

The number of anglers permitted to fish these refuges will be limited to 400 in Mount Mitchell, 375 in Daniel Boone, 450 in Sherwood, 400 in Standing Indian, 100 in Wayah Bald and 300 in Fires Creek. In the South Toe River, North Harper Creek and the Big East Fork of the Pidgeon artificial lures only are permitted.

For this area write to the district ranger's office at Asheville for detailed information, or to the Asheville Chamber of Commerce, for the map and booklet published by the Fish and Game Committee.

Stocked With Bass

During the past dozen or so years, the streams of Puerto Rico and other islands of the Caribbean have been stocked with northern trout and bass. Even the waters of the Canal Zone have received their quota of our stream fish. Now, the Federal hatchery at Cape Vincent, N. Y., is sending 250,000 lake trout eggs to Peru, where they will be used to stock the waters of Lake Titacacota, one of the highest altitude lakes in the world. The eggs were shipped in special cases, each holding 36 quarts, and refrigerated to suspend life during the long trip to the Southern Hemisphere.

Although lake trout are much sought after by sport fishermen, their real value lays in their commercial fishing. For this purpose, this hatchery has shipped eggs to Japan, Switzerland and almost every State in the Union.

When Hugo Rutherford pioneered the blue marlin fishing off the North Carolina coast last year—and caught a 450-pounder—he started something. This year will probably see many privately owned sport fishermen off Hatteras Inlet in search of the "jumpers."

Already Ed and Milt Bonoff are there, aboard Mel Eldred's cruiser Julieanna, cruising the Hundred Fathom Curve. Even though it is still rather early to find the big blues in this section, or in fact anywhere in northern waters, there is always a possibility. However, it was much later than this when Rutherford took his large fish.

Greek All-Stars Win Pin Match

Demeres rolled a first game of 185 and the winners a game of 661 to take a lead they never lost, although the Italians were chiseling the margin with each game. Nick Chaconas had 585 and Demeres 583 to lead the winners, while Nick Rinaldi's four-game total of 467 and Joe Micro's 552 for the set led the losers. The rivals may meet in a return match.

Army and Navy Netmen Win

Tennis players of Army and Navy Country Club proved their supremacy over Edgemoor players yesterday on the service courts, the defenders smashing out a 6-to-1 victory in the first interclub match of the season. Army-Navy won both doubles matches and four of the five singles.

Allen Blade, Edgemoor racqueter, turned in the only triumph for his team when he trounced Lieut. Lane, of A. N., by scores of 6—2 and 6—3. Three of the service singles victories were in straight sets; Austin Rice defeating Allen Staubly, 6—1, 6—2; Tom Mangin defeating Don Barber, 6—2, 6—3; and Victor Sadd defeating Begolia, 6—2, 6—2. The only three-set match was taken by Maj. Lupley over Erana, 6—4, 4—6 and 6—4.

Mehaffey and Tigrett paired to defeat Phillips and Staubly, of Edgemoor, in the doubles. The final match was won by Bayer-Hoyt over Garber-Begolia, 6—2, 6—2.

Kenwood Country Club entertained the University Club on the Maryland courts, taking a 7-to-1 victory. The only match won by the guests was the doubles encounter which Galliher and Becker took from Fuchs and Olmstead, 6—4, 6—3. Ross-Jones, of Kenwood, defeated White-Hardy, 6—0, 6—3; Summerville-Lukens defeated Ray-Robinson, 6—4, 6—4, and Judd-Smith defeated Haythorne-Owens, 6—0, 6—3.

By Walter Johnson,

(WJSV-General Mills Broadcaster.)

Rookie Johnny Welaj figures in the Man of the Month awards for the first time, following his performances at Cleveland yesterday. Welaj is voted the lion's share of the latest distribution of points.

To Welaj, four points, because he literally saved the game in the eighth when, with the winning run on third, he went far back to make a spectacular catch of Bob Feller's long drive for the third out.

To George Case, two points, because he stole home in the second inning, and contributed two important hits to the Nats' attack.

To Buddy Myer, two points, because he greeted Feller with a single that tied the score in the eighth and made two other hits, including a double.

To Jake Early, one point, because as a pinch hitter he singled against Feller in the tenth to put the potential winning run in scoring position.

Eight Games Mark Opening of League; D. G. S. Wins, 28-5

With eight fast and interesting games yesterday, National Capitol Baseball League got under way on the Monument and Ellipse diamonds. Section B of the league, including eight of the 16 teams, started its fireworks in the morning, and B Division played in the afternoon.

Of the eight victors in the day's scrambles, D. G. S. scored the widest decision in A Section when it tallied 11 runs in the third, and sixth in both the first and fifth, to trounce Cameo Furniture, 28 to 5. Two pitchers, Deuers and Bruce, combined to allow only eight hits against the Grocerymen, who D. G. S. pounded two Cameo hurlers for 22 safeties.

Klein's Tavern nine also checked in a one-sided final score, its 21 hits earning a 17 to 4 victory over Tex Tavern. Buddy O'Brien, throwing for J. C. Flood Plumbing, shut out Retail Clerks, 7 to 0, as he gave up five hits. Reed's Pharmacy took advantage of a 7-run uprising in the second period to convincingly whip Small Motors, 12 to 2.

In the other half of the league, scores ran considerably closer, the widest being Dyer Company's 11-to-2 swamping of Ross Jewelers. Though it was able to get only two safeties off the pitching of Orton and Duffey, Service Battery smashed Southwest Market, 5 to 2, the winning and final runs coming in the fourth period. Arcade Market braced itself after taking a four-run lead in the second inning, and beat Wakefield Dairy, 6 to 5. The six-inning contest between Wade Service and Arcade Pontiac went to the former in an airtight pitching duel, 4 to 2.

Refunding HOLC Bonds Offered Today

Holders of 1½%'s Are Asked to Exchange For ⅜ and ⅝%'s

The Secretary of the Treasury, on behalf of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, is offering today, through the Federal Reserve banks, to the holders of 1½ per cent bonds of series F-1939 of the corporation, which mature on June 1, the privilege of exchanging such maturing bonds for new bonds of the corporation to be issued in two series.

Both series will be dated and bear interest from May 15, one series being 1-year ⅜ per cent bonds of series K-1940, due May 15, 1940, and the other series being 2-year ⅜ per cent bonds of series L-1941, due May 15, 1941.

The maturing bonds will be received in multiples of $100 only, and will be applied 40 per cent to the new 1-year ⅜ per cent bonds and 60 per cent to the new 2-year ⅝ per cent bonds, with adjustments to the nearest $100 where necessary. Exchanges will be made at par, and accrued interest to May 15, 1939, on the maturing bonds will be paid following their acceptance.

The present offering is strictly on an exchange basis and will be limited to the amount of the maturing bonds tendered and accepted. Cash subscriptions will not be received, but to the extent the maturing bonds are not exchanged at this time an additional amount of either or both issues may subsequently be offered for cash.

The bonds will be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and will be accorded the same exemptions from taxation as are accorded other issues of Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds now outstanding.

Bearer bonds with interest coupons attached will be issued in denominations of $100, $500, $1,000, $10,000 and $100,000. The bonds will not be issued in registered form.

Chemical Fund Assets $9.40 Per Share

New York, May 7 (AP).—The first annual report of Chemical Fund, Inc., made public today shows assets of $2,405,316 and liabilities of $5,120, or net assets, based on market value on March 31, 1939, of $2,400,196, equivalent to $9.40 per share on the shares outstanding at the end of the fiscal year.

A classification of the company's portfolio, which includes dividend-paying stocks of 40 chemical companies, shows 61 per cent of the company's net assets invested in "cyclical" common stocks, 29 per cent in "noncyclical" common stocks and the remaining 10 per cent in preferred stocks, U. S. Treasury bonds, cash and accounts receivable. It is explained that "cyclical" stocks are those which are particularly sensitive to the cycles of general business, and "noncyclical," those possessing to a marked degree steadiness in earnings and dividends.

Lewis and C. I. O. Are Losing Ground, Babson Declares

Sees No Sign of Peace With A. F. of L. Public Against C. I. O. Tactics, He Says Recession Hurts the Lewis Unions

By Roger W. Babson

Babson Park, Mass., May 7.—There is no sign of peace this year between Mr. Green and Mr. Lewis. From 1935 through last fall the C. I. O. group steadily ganied ground on the A. F. of L. A year and a half ago Lewis was so strong that he threatened to merge the less picturesque A. F. of L. into his C. I. O. Cagey old William Green, however, called time out to take the edge off the Lewis drive. Meanwhile, the breaks began to go against the C. I. O. and Lewis has since been on the defensive. However, he is not yet licked by any means. Moreover, if a consolidation ever takes place, I do not think either Green or Lewis will be in the saddle.

The law of action and reaction works in human relations just as it does in physics and in economics. The public is badly fed up on the C. I. O. and its tactics. Lewis' movement, popular when it started, has made enemies of many former friends. While the public is not in love with the A. F. of L., at least the methods used by Mr. Green's group seem less obnoxious than those used by the more youthful C. I. O. crowd. This public reaction is, therefore, having its effect on Lewis' power. What has happened the past week brings this out clearly.

Recession Slows C. I. O.

The business recession has given the Lewis unions some more bad jolts. The widespread lay-offs in the automobile and steel centers have strained the treasuries of the new C. I. O. unions. Because the A. F. of L. groups are older, they are richer than Uncle John's new unions. Their finances can stand the gaff of this slowing-down period of business better than can those of the C. I. O. To meet the reduction in income, the latter has had to let a lot of valuable organizers and other staff workers go. This has halted their drive for new members and has given them a definite setback in many plants where their roots were pretty well down a year and a half ago.

A third factor which may be the "button punch" for the belligerent Mr. Lewis was the strike in the soft coal fields. The money necessary to run his gigantic 1937 offensive against the motor and steel industries was put up largely by the United Mine Workers. They were the spearhead of the whole C. I. O. drive. I was curious as to whom Mr. Lewis was referring recently when he said that "outside interests" were backing up the rebellious bituminous mine operators. A little checking around reveals there is not much doubt as to whom John L. was referring. These "outside interests" are the big coal consumers such as the railroads, utilities, steel companies, and other large employers who simply cannot afford to pay any more for coal.

A Rear Guard Attack?

These consumers are large enough to take a great part of the output of a single coal mine. Hence, their bosses can talk turkey to the mine operators. These big consumers, inspired by Tom Girdler, Eugene Grace, and others, would like nothing better than to "put the finger" on the C. I. O. for once and for all. The Lewis adherents claim these large consumers of coal have stiffened up the backbones of the mine operators. The strike, with 340,000 miners out of work, has been a mighty costly affair for the United Mine Workers as well as for you and me. It has hit at the Achilles heel of the C. I. O., the treasury of the United Mine Workers.

The story is that if the "war chest" of the United Mine Workers can be destroyed, the C. I. O. will be ready for honest dealing. It is pretty well known that the millions of thrifty stockholders of this country feel that Mr. Green is fairer and more dependable than Mr. Lewis. Many impartial leaders believe that labor itself would, in the long run, be better off under a man like Mr. Green than under a man like Mr. Lewis. On the other hand, the vertical system of unionization which Mr. Lewis advocates is sounder than the horizontal system for which Mr. Green stands. Hence, if the A. F. of L. group win they must adopt the C. I. O. idea in order to avoid another fight later on.

ROGER W. BABSON

What Operators Say

The mine operators, however, insist that they have always been ready to renew the contract which expired April 1. Their story is that the A. F. of L. is "muscling in" on the C. I. O. with a new union in the coal fields. It is making progress and it worries Mr. Lewis. He wants to eliminate the fines imposed in the old contracts for unauthorized lockouts and strikes so that he can call his C. I. O. men out of any mine that hires an A. F. of L. worker. The operators have fought against throwing out these penalties. They believe that if both sides unite on a contract, both sides should be liable to the same penalty for breaking it.

The whole situation has been very interesting. On the surface, there is now absolutely no sign of a permanent armistice between these two major labor groups. But perhaps we are now witnessing strategy which in the end will bring peace—with the A. F. of L. securing the lion's share of the laurels. The fact that the average annual wage of the C. I. O. worker is $1,200 compared with $2,000 for the A. F. of L. worker has been a major stumbling block to date. The A. F. of L. members feel that they have nothing to gain and a lot to lose by joining up with the C. I. O. The latter group want to get together with the A. F. of L. but on their own terms. Hence, the deadlock.

Public "Holds the Bag"

Meanwhile, patient John Q. Public has been taking it on the chin as usual. The 340,000 idle miners were declared eligible for unemployment insurance compensation. The unemployment fund, of course, represents the contributions of all workers. It was not set up to support strikes. Moreover, the coal tie-up has cost many railroad workers their jobs. Steel operations have dropped and general business has sagged 5 per cent. We need a labor act that will prevent such situations—one that will protect consumers and the jobs of innocent workers in other industries.

Cotton Expert Sees Price War With Subsidy

New York, May 7.—The cotton export subsidy plan now under consideration in the United States Senate will, if put into execution, result in chaotic conditions in the world cotton trade, virtually constituting a world price war, in the opinion of M. Montero-Bernales, Peruvian cotton merchant who is in this country studying the cotton situation.

Mr. Montero is president of the Lima, Peru, firm bearing his name, the largest cotton brokerage house in Peru. He is a member of the governing board of the Agricultural Bank of Peru, a semigovernmental institution which finances all branches of agriculture in Peru. He is well known throughout the cotton trade in this country, Europe, and the Orient, as well as in South America, as an outstanding authority on Peruvian cotton.

Pointing to the severe price declines that have already taken place in foreign cotton markets on the mere proposal of the subsidy plan, he expressed the conviction that the plan would seriously damage the national economy of Peru and of other cotton-growing countries.

Steel Operating Decline Halts at 49 Per Cent

Cleveland, May 7 (AP).—National steel ingot production leveled off last week at 49 per cent of capacity after five successive weekly declines, the magazine Steel reported today. The national rate a year ago was 31 per cent.

Arrest of the decline does not provide hope for a reversal in trend, however, the publication cautioned. It said the letdown during the remainder of the spring probably will be gradual.

The paralysis in coal mining operations had little noticeable effect on steel making during April, but pig-iron production dropped 11 per cent from March, as 22 blast furnace stacks were shut down, most of them banked. Steel plants generally are removed several weeks from any fuel scarcity which might curtail production.

Activity last week was marked by a few orders for 1940 automobiles, a small flurry among rail equipment buyers, and continued decline in mill backlogs of rails and fastenings. Tin plate demand and production increased, giving the market its brightest spot. The advance was to 70 per cent, highest rate of the year.

Real Estate Threat

New York, May 7.—Punitive taxes on chain stores constitute a dire threat to real estate values, according to a survey by the Business Property Owners Association, which shows that 4 cents of every dollar spent in chain stores goes to pay rent to local landlords. This is more than twice as much as the average profit derived from chain store operation, the survey states.

40 KWH Equals 5,778 Can

New York, May 7.—It costs the average American household only $1.71 for lighting with 40 kilowatt hours of electricity a month, while with candles an equivalent amount of light would cost $345.65 a month, according to the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation. About 5,778 candles, weighing more than half a ton, would be burned.

Rukeyser Says: Business Men Must Listen To Customers

By Merryle Stanley Rukeyser,
International News Service Economic Commentator.

New York, May 7.—Forward looking business men are recognizing that it constitutes enlightened self-interest to show unselfish devotion to the other fellow. This attitude is expressed not only in humane dealings with employes, but also in zealous concern for the interests of customers.

Such thinking is not confined to executives of giant enterprises. For example, a small business firm, McGrath Sand & Gravel Co., Lincoln, Ill., in a recent memorandum, pointed out: "The customer is the boss. He means much to the seller. He is the fellow who pays the bills. He is the man who meets the payrolls. He is someone who is to be well served. A customer is more than a possible account. Your pay check and mine depends on the customer. Every time a mistake is made it affects a customer. No business can endure long without customer good-will.

"Your job and mine rests not on just our own efforts but on the customer—without him, we all lose our jobs."

General Motors Views

In a similar vein, the mammoth General Motors Corporation, in its current first annual report to employes pointed out that "jobs depend on customers." The report said: "The amount of work to be done in General Motors last year was less than the year before because we had fewer customers."

As a matter of fact, the employing corporation is in reality only the middleman through whom customers give employment to workers. Specialized workers in one industry employ one another by swapping the products of their hours of labor.

In the coming decade, there will be expanding opportunities for public officials who similarly think in terms of customers. The customer or clients of government are the taxpayers.

Accordingly, instead of tearing down taxpayers through muddleheaded restrictions, through business baiting and through excessive imposts, governmental officials should recognize the advisability of building them up.

Problem Neglected

In the past decade there has been neglect of this problem. For example, public agencies in some districts supplanted private utility corporations and thus took them off the tax rolls. Likewise, the conversion of private property in various States into Federal parks, though perhaps in some instances justifiable on other grounds, took such acreage off the tax rolls.

In connection with my service as a judge of the best public relations newspaper advertising of public utilities in 1938, for which awards will be made next month by the Public Utilities Advertising Association, I was impressed at the increasing emphasis placed in such copy on the social aspects of business. A decade ago institutional copy dealt blatantly with bigness and other qualities that corporations sought to crow over. Now there is growing stress on how companies render useful and economical services to customers, and contribute to better living.

Perhaps this growing social consciousness on the part of corporate executives is one of the hidden benefits of the depression period, which constitute a partial offset to the losses.

Montgomery Ward Reports Best April

Chicago, May 7 (AP).—Montgomery Ward & Co., reported April sales of $41,595,351 today, the best April in the history of the mail-order house. The figure was 12.33 per cent greater than the April sales of $37,062,930 last year.

Sales for the first fiscal quarter ended April 30 were $102,289,291, 14.13 per cent above the first quarter sales of $89,624,311 last year.

Bridges of Tomorrow

Boston, Mass., May 7.—Rivers will be spanned and city boroughs linked in the future with lightweight materials such as duralumin and aluminum, Prof. John B. Wilbur, of Massachusetts Institute of echnology predicts, because present-day bridges use up to five-sixths of their strength in supporting their own weight.

Milady's Hats Too Capricious, U. S. Report Says

Milady's capriciousness in quick shifts from "big apple" hats to beveiled models (and back again), is raising hob with the millinery industry, the Labor Department revealed yesterday.

Anxious to discover why the hat business lagged while other lines showed distinct advances in 1935 and 1936, the Woman's Bureau concluded that uncertainty as to whether a new mode would "catch on" and consequent "hand-to-mouth" buying by manufacturers, had clogged production channels.

The bureau suggests "seriousmindedness" with a "quickened artistic sense" be drafted to predict seasonal hat styles and thus keep manufacturers abreast of feminine quick change tendencies.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

The Gallinger Local of the United Federal Workers of America have protested bitterly to the Senate Appropriations Committee on the failure of the House to provide for enough personnel to establish the eight-hour day and alleviate the understaffing situation.

In a letter sent out by Kenneth Orr, president of Local 92, to all members of the committee, he states that a condition endangering the patients must be faced unless, according to the union's survey, 61 more employes are added to the staff in addition to the 30 provided in the appropriation bill.

The Gen. Malin Craig Post No. 20, Regular Veterans Association, in a specila meeting on May 3 heard representatives from GAO, SSB, War, Navy and Coast Guard attack the two bills now with Civil Service Chairman Ramspeck's committee on Civil Service. They pointed out that one bill would eliminate peacetime preferences while the other would authorize preferences only to disabled veterans. Ramspeck, who has promised careful consideration to Harry G. Ritner, GAO, publicity officer of the post, has been acquainted with possible kick-back from the veterans. It was also pointed out that Canada tried to change its preference laws and was sorry for it. It was the beginning of a bitter fight between all classes of veterans. Twenty new regulars were admitted to membership.

A veterans, questionnaire distributed at the Treasury, GAO, Postoffice, Federal Housing Administration, Justice Department, CCC, ECC and Veterans' Administration has shown, after a tabulation by Post No. 20, that almost all of those officials receiving the questionnaire stand against the amending of the veterans' preference laws.

Ritner said also fears were expressed that a general demoralization of the armed forces would occur if such amendments should be passed.

Members of the National Association of Retired Federal Employes sat through a double feature, "For the People" and "Winter Sun and Summer Sea," two motion pictures featured at their monthly meeting yesterday afternoon at the National Museum.

Bill Manger, of Takoma Post No. 24, has some sound pictures in color he is going to show at the meeting on May 9 of the Treasury Post, American Legion, at the New Colonial Hotel.

The Government unions, harking back to last summer's heat and humidity, are hot after a definite policy for excusing employes who work in buildings not air-conditioned when the thermometer records an unusual temperature.

Another subject equally as hot that the unions plan to attack is job discrimination against women who could actually qualify except for the arbitrary preference for men. The U. F. W. plans to press the changing of the present policy "except where satisfactory proof is offered that the sex of the applicant is an important element of qualification."

APPOINTMENT: Louis W. Kehr goes to assist National Capital Parks Naturalist Donald E. McHenry during the summer months. A Botanist and nature guide expert, he was, before his appointment as ranger naturalist, professor of biology at St. Francis College, Burlington, Wis.

Bob Burns Says—

I've seen a lot of folks fall out over little things that could've been fixed up with just a little understandin'. It always years for some folks to understand others. Then, too, there's others who get the hang of it right off. For instance, the cannibal can't understand the missionary, but he can digest him.

After I stayed in a cheap hotel one night, I came downstairs and the manager said, "Well, friend, how'd you enjoy the bagpipe music in the room next to yours last night?"

I said, "That's what I want'ta talk to you about. I pounded and banged half the night, but that bag-piper just wouldn't shut up."

He said, "In that case there was a slight misunderstanding. That bag-piper has been panting all morning from tooting that thing. He played every tune he knew five times last night . . . he thought you were applauding."

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

A friendly bidding controversy between two Washington doctors concerning the obligation of the responding hand to a slam convention, has aroused great interest and comment among the many bridge enthusiasts of the Capital. Dr. James A. Gannon and Dr. R. Arthur Hooe are the players in question.

The hand with the bidding of the two doctors, which resulted in the loss of a slam, is shown in today's box. Dr. Gannon failed to reply to his partner's slam try of four no trump. Six were made at that contract, through a favorable lead, but the slam bonus which could be had at either hearts or spades without contest, was lost.

Whether or not West, Dr. Gannon, was obliged to reply to his partner's slam convention is the question. Dr. Gannon says no, claiming that his responsibility ended with his holding open the bidding to game.

Dr. Hooe says yes, maintaining that his bidding had clearly indicated a two-suiter hand, that it was an obvious slam try (the pair was using the Culbertson four-no-trump contention, not the Blackwood) and that his partner was just as obligated to respond to this bid as to the two-suit forcing call.

Frank B. Lord, Washington bridge editor and expert, says both doctors are in part wrong. He analyzes the situation as follows:

"It must be stated that both contenders are in part in error. Dr. Gannon more so than Dr. Hooe.

"Under the Culbertson system, which both were assuming to play, the bidding should have been:

East	South	West	North
2 ♡	Pass	2 NT.	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
6 ♠ or 6 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

The error of Dr. Hooe lay in the fact that he interjected a bid of four no trump on the third round of bidding. It is quite evident that he did this in order to force his partner to call five clubs, if he held the ace of that suit. That card would enable East to bid and make seven hearts. The four-no-trump bid, however, was wrong and unwise, for West by his first response of two no trump had already said that he held no aces and that his hand was negative.

"In the one-over-one system a call of four no trump by East would have been permissible, but not necessary, according to the Culbertson forcing system. Once the bid has been made, however, West cannot allow the bidding to cease, but is under the obligation to keep it open by calling five in the lowest of the two bid suits, which would, in this case, have been hearts. East would then go six hearts or six spades since West's four-spade bid has given him the assurance that he has a fit in that suit and nothing else."

The discussion exciting Washington players might have never come up had the doctors settled their difficulties as did one resourceful, if erratic, player.

He and his partner had decided to use the Blackwood four no-trump convention, and shortly thereafter a hand was dealt upon which his partner had an opportunity to go to four no trump after strength had been shown on both sides.

To the utter confusion of his partner, the player replied with five no trump—instead of showing his aces, if any. Five no trump indicates four aces in the Blackwood bid, but that was impossible, as the four no-trump bidder had two himself. After some thinking, he decided to risk six anyway.

When the player's hand went down on the board it showed two aces. "I thought we were playing Blackwood," said the declarer. "Why didn't you reply with five hearts?"

"To tell the truth," answered the player, "I forgot whether we were playing Culbertson or Blackwood, and I figured if I bid five no trump you would understand I had two aces and go to six, anyway."

Secrets in Love

By Phyllis Moore Gallagher

Margaret Patterson sat down on one of the sofas with its square white card. All the antique furniture in this Massachusetts avenue home was for sale

CHAPTER I

"PLEASE DO NOT TOUCH," said a square white card on the top of every table, the seat of every antique chair and sofa. The contents of this pretentious marble mansion on Massachusetts avenue were to be sold next week at auction, because the owners had come to Washington, had seen and been seen but had not conquered.

And now the super-smart members of society, who had sniffed at formal invitations from this imposing home, and who had carefully looked the other way when driving past its gleaming facade, were eddying through the grated doors, halting, murmuring, flowing this way and that like a river overrunning its banks.

Margaret Patterson had been wandering through the mansion, too. Now she lifted a placard off of a blue brocaded sofa and sat down and scrutinized herself in the mirror across the long drawing room. She saw a small girl with eyes as deep, as velvety, as blue-black as old-fashioned pansies; with hair that had a warm brown hue, like an autumn leaf with the sun upon it. She was wearing a black silk dress with a white pique collar and a scarf of kolinsky around her shoulders. There was a bow-knot of kolinsky on her black felt hat, too, and she lifted slim fingers and patted it fondly.

"Not bad on $20 a week, Miss Patterson," said Peg to herself. "Not bad at all." Peg was the name by which her friends called her.

Why She Was Working

Then her cheeks colored a little and her eyes smiled through a sort of puzzled frustration. She wasn't worth $20 a week to Otto Nelson or anybody else and she knew it. She was his god-daughter. He had given her a clerkship in his brokerage firm because her father had been his best friend and because she was so dreadfully hard up. She thought a little sickly: "Mr. Nelson proably sent me over here this afternoon to get my opinion on the Van Dyke portrait, because he was tired of seeing me act like a stampeded buffalo around the office." Then she thought, feeling strangely light-headed as she always did when she thought of Hewitt Gill: "But what difference will it make when Hewitt and I are married? After all, working in an office is just a stop-gap for me and for most girls like me . . ."

She didn't have the slightest doubt now that one day, not too far distant, Hewitt would ask her to marry him. Hewitt Gill was a tall young man with eyes that were singularly black, with a slim, tanned serious face. He looked much more like an athelete than a bond salesman.

She had met him six months ago when she had started to work for Mr. Nelson. Their eyes had met over Mr. Nelson's desk; had met and stayed together and something swift and ardent had stirred in her blood, like the flowing of quicksilver. She had been ecstatically miserable and tongue-tied in that moment.

The next day she had sat at a lunch counter with a group of girls from the office, wracking her brains to steer the conversation around to Hewitt Gill so she could really find out something about him. But the silly hats women were wearing and had anybody seen Ray Milland's newest picture. Finally she had said, keeping her voice very casual and calm: "Mr. Gill looks something like Ray Milland, don't you think?" He didn't of course. It was perfectly silly to even say so.

Analyzing Hewitt

The girls were off then. Hewitt Gill was set up on that lunch counter and neatly picked to piece. And they weren't very pretty pieces. The girls seemed to think that he was a lick-spittle. That he picked his friends by their rating in Bradstreet and by their addresses. That he wouldn't be caught dead with any girl who wasn't Social Register, a debutante or a Senator's daughter. He had reached the point where he didn't know anyone in Washington who couldn't do him some good, one way or another. As for his friends from high school and Georgetown U. he had used them all he could and now he had kicked them out. He had come a long way from the kid who used to live in Foggy Bottom . . . a long nasty way.

"And dames," said the girl who handled the office switchboard. "They're nuts about him just the same. You ought to see how many times I plug-in honey-sweet voices on his line. But it's that Thalia Polk, who's in Europe now, who really counts with On-The-Make-Gill. She's got so much dough she probably has to hire help in thinking of ways to spend it."

Peg had bitten a finger-nail, realized that she was doing it and had promptly laughed. "He doesn't sound very nice," she had said, brightly. "It's a wonder women would chase a man like that."

"Women will chase anything in pants. Hadn't you heard?"

But they were all wrong about Hewitt, Peg had learned in that next month. He was ruthless and ambitious, as what young man shouldn't be these days; and he didn't pay the slightest personal attention to any of the girls in the office, which explained their opinion of him.

One night when she had been working late Hewitt had asked her to have dinner with him. She had been, she felt, just as stupid and self-conscious and ecstatically miserable as during their first meeting. Still he had asked her again, and presently they were spending many evenings together.

Plans for Hewitt

It was Hewitt's desire of a partnership in Mr. Nelson's firm that really had drawn them very close together. "It takes a load off my mind to talk it out with some one," Hewitt had told her. It seemed that Mr. Nelson, who was nearly 70, had reached that point of prosperity where he enjoyed being stubborn about decisions. He had given Hewitt in the four years he had been working there more money, more responsibility and was forever dangling before his eyes the chance of a partnership. And then, as if taking a perverse delight in his power, he would yank away all the responsibility. One minute he would call Hewitt the boy wonder and mean it; but in the next Hewitt was a damned young upstart who wanted to run everything around him. Hewitt never really knew quite where he stood; nor what to expect next.

"Peg," Hewitt would say, with his eyes dark and desperately serious, "I've got to have that partnership. It means everything to me. Nelson can't let me down now. It isn't as if I don't deserve it. I've worked like twenty field hands for it. You know that. I've brought in business. Lots of it. Contacts I've made at the country clubs and in gadding around with people like Senator Polk, who have all the money in the world, but who bore me stiff."

Always during their dates they would fall to talking about Peg's willing part in helping. "Oh, he blusters with you, but he's really nuts about you. You have real influence with him."

Lush Nights

But their dates weren't all talk of partnerships by any means. The summer had promised an idyll and had kept its promise. Lush nights, green leaves against dark skies, tall clouds building into castles, unfurling like banners over the world; soft nights, fragrant with honeysuckle, sharp with stars and little breezes. All the world at its perfection and all theirs to wander in.

And they had wandered in it. Driving far into the country, finding a secluded pretty place, where they parked the car and sat listening to the noises of the woods and of the night.

Last night she and Hewitt had driven out into Virginia. Suddenly Hewitt had turned the car off into a little road that led to the high banks of the Potomac. It was still, isolated, darkly enchanted there. He had crushed her in his arms and had kissed her tenderly at first and then not tenderly at all. He had held her too long, too terribly breathlessly close, and she had pushed him away, trembling.

She had shrunk away from him then, not wanting to really, but doing it just the same. Hewitt had lit a cigarette promptly, thwarted and puzzled. In the flare of the match she knew he had seen the hurt in her misty eyes, the trembling, frightened mouth.

He had bit his lip. "I'm sorry, Peg. That won't happen again. I really don't want to turn this into something—cheap. You're too sweet . . . I love you far too much for that. One of these days things will be different. I'll be in a position to do what I want to do. . . ."

She had said simply, "I know, Hewitt."

Washingtonia

The crowd was thickening around Peg now and her mind came back to the present. People were sitting, despite the warning signs, on the Louis XIV chairs which the newly-rich lady had bought in vain. They were tramping over the Beshir-Bokara rugs, all myriad shades of red, where she had paced in an agony of humiliation because Washington would not take her to its social bosom.
